By Way of Introduction

But for the Acts we should know nothing of the early apostolic period save what is told in the Epistles. There are various apocryphal "Acts," but they are without historical worth. Hence the importance of this book.

LUKE THE AUTHOR

It ought to be possible to assume this as a fact since the work of Ramsay and Harnack on various phases of the problems concerning the Acts. Harnack, in particular, has covered the ground with his accustomed thoroughness and care in his two volumes (The Acts of the Apostles, English Translation by Rev. J. R. Wilkinson, 1909; The Date of the Acts and the Synoptic Gospels, English Translation by Rev. J. R. Wilkinson, 1911). Ramsay's view may be found in Chapter I of St. Paul the Traveller and the Roman Citizen, Chapter XII of Pauline and Other Studies. A good summary of the matter appears in Part V of The Synoptic Gospels and the Book of Acts by Dr. D. A. Hayes, in Robertson's Luke the Historian in the Light of Research, and in the introduction to the various commentaries by Knowling, Rackham, Furneaux, Rendall, Hackett, Meyer-Wendt, Zahn, Blass, Campbell-Morgan, Stokes. In Part I of The Acts of the Apostles, Vol. II of The Beginnings of Christianity, edited by Foakes-Jackson and Kirsopp Lake both sides are ably presented: The Case for the Tradition by C. W. Emmet, The Case against the Tradition by H. Windisch. The Internal Evidence of Acts is discussed by the Editors, Foakes-Jackson and Lake, with an adverse conclusion against Luke. Henry J. Cadbury surveys The Tradition (the external evidence) and draws a negative conclusion likewise on the ground that the early writers who ascribe Acts to Luke were not critical scholars. A similar position is taken by Cadbury in his more recent volume, The Making of Luke--Acts (1927). But all the same the traditional view that Luke is the author of the Acts holds the field with those who are not prejudiced against it. The view of Baur that Acts is a Tendenz writing for the purpose of healing the breach between Peter and Paul and showing that the two factions came together had great influence for a while. In fact both Ramsay and Harnack at first held it. Ramsay broke away first and he was followed by Harnack. Both were influenced to change their views by the accumulation of evidence to the effect that the author of both the Gospel and Acts is Luke the Physician and Friend of Paul. Part of this evidence has already been given in the Introduction to the Gospel according to Luke.

THE AUTHOR OF THE GOSPEL ALSO

The author of the Acts expressly states that he wrote "the first treatise (τον πρωτον λογον) concerning all things, O Theophilus, that Jesus began both to do and to teach until which day he gave command through the Holy Spirit to the apostles whom he had chosen and was received up" (Ac 1:1f. ). There is no room for dispute that the reference is directly to the Gospel according to Luke as we have it now. Like the Gospel the book is dedicated to Theophilus. And, what is even more important, the same style appears in both Gospel and Acts. This fact Harnack has shown with great pains and conclusiveness. There is the same interest in medical matters and even Cadbury, who denies by implication the Lukan authorship, admits identity of authorship for both books.

THE UNITY OF THE ACTS

There are some scholars who are willing to admit the Lukan authorship of the "we" sections when the author uses "we" and "us" as in chapter 16:10-40; 20:6-28:31 . It has been argued that Luke wrote a travel-document or diary for these sections, but that this material was used by the editor or redactor of the whole book. But, unfortunately for that view, the very same style appears in the Acts as a whole and in the Gospel also as Harnack has proven. The man who said "we" and "us" in the "we" sections wrote "I" in 1:1 and refers to the Gospel as his work. The effort to disprove the unity of the Acts has failed. It stands as the work of the same author as a whole and the same author who wrote the Gospel.

SOURCES OF THE ACTS

Beyond a doubt Luke employed a variety of sources for this great history as he did for the Gospel (Lu 1:1-4 ). In fact, Cadbury argues that this Prologue was meant to apply to the Acts also as Volume II whether he intended to write a third volume or not. Certainly we are entitled to say that Luke used the same historical method for Acts. Some of these sources are easy to see. Luke had his own personal experience for the "we" sections. Then he had the benefit of Paul's own notes or suggestions for all that portion where Paul figures from chapters 8 to 28, since Luke was apparently with Paul in Rome when he finished the Book. This would include Paul's sermons and addresses which Luke gives unless one wishes to say, as some do, that Luke followed the style of Thucydides and composed the kind of addresses that he thought Paul would make. I see no evidence of that for each address differs from the others and suits precisely the occasion when it was delivered. The ancients frequently employed shorthand and Paul may have preserved notes of his addresses. Prof. C. C. Torrey, of Yale University, argues in his Composition and Date of Acts (1916) that Luke used an Aramaic document for the first fifteen chapters of the Acts. There is an Aramaic element in certain portions of these chapters, but nothing like so pronounced as in Luke 1 and 2 after Lu 1:1-4 . It cannot be said that Torrey has made out his case for such a single document. Luke may have had several such documents besides access to others familiar with the early days of the work in Jerusalem. There was Simon Peter whom Paul visited for two weeks in Jerusalem (Ga 1:18 ) besides other points of contact with him in Jerusalem and Antioch (Ac 15 and Ga 2 ). There was also Barnabas who was early Paul's friend (Ac 9:27 ) and who knew the beginnings as few did (Ac 4:36f. ). Besides many others it is to be observed that Paul with Luke made a special visit to Caesarea where he spent a week with the gifted Philip and his daughters with the gift of prophecy (Ac 21:8f. ). But with all the inevitable variety of sources for the information needed to cover the wide field of the Book of Acts the same mind has manifestly worked through it and it is the same style all through that appears in the "we" sections where the writer is confessedly a companion of Paul. No other companion of Paul carries this claim for the authorship and no other was a physician and no author has the external evidence from early writers.

THE DATE

There are three views about the date of the Acts. Baur and his Tubingen School held the second century to be the date of this late pamphlet as they termed it after the fashion of the Clementine Homilies. But that view is now practically abandoned save by the few who still strangely oppose the Lukan authorship. Probably the majority of those who accept the Lukan authorship place it in the latter part of the first century for two reasons. One is that the Gospel according to Luke is dated by them after the destruction of Jerusalem because of the prophecy by Jesus of the encompassing of the city by armies. Predictive prophecy that would be and so it is considered a prophecy post eventum. The other reason is the alleged use of the Antiquities of Josephus by Luke. Josephus finished this work A.D. 93 so that, if Luke did use it, he must have written the Acts after that date. Usually this argument is made to show that Luke could not have written it at all, but some hold that he may have lived to an age that would allow it. But it cannot be assumed that Luke used Josephus because of his mention of Theudas and Judas the Galilean. They differ so widely (Ac 5:36f. and Josephus, Ant. XX. v, 1, 2) that Von Dobschutz (Dictionary of the Apostolic Church, art. Josephus) argues that the two accounts are entirely independent of each other. So Luke (Lu 13:1f. ) alludes to a Galilean revolt not mentioned by Josephus and Josephus records three revolts under Pilate not referred to by Luke. A comparison of the accounts of the death of Agrippa I in Ac 12:20-23 and Ant. XIX. viii, 2 redounds to the credit of Luke. The Josephus phase of the argument may be brushed to one side. The third view, held by Harnack and adopted here, is that Luke wrote the Acts while with Paul in Rome and finished the book before Paul's release, that is by A.D. 63. This is the obvious and natural way to take the language of Luke at the close of Acts. Events had gone no farther and so he ends the narrative right there. It is argued against this that Luke contemplated a third volume and for this reason closed with the arrival of Paul in Rome. But the use of πρῶτον (first) in Ac 1:1 is a common Koine idiom and does not imply three volumes any more than first and second stories with us means that the house has three. Of course this date for the Acts puts the date of the Gospel further back either in Caesarea (57 to 59) or in Rome (60 to 62). And that means that Mark's Gospel is still earlier since Luke used it for his Gospel and the Logia (Q) earlier still. But all these dates are probable in the light of all the known facts.

THE HISTORICAL VALUE

It was once a fad with a certain school of critics to decry Luke in the Acts as wholly un-trustworthy, not above the legendary stage. But the spade has done well by Luke for inscriptions and papyri have brought remarkable confirmation for scores of points where Luke once stood all alone and was discounted because he stood alone. These will be duly noted in the proper places as they occur. Ramsay has done most in this restoration of the rank of Luke as a credible historian, as shown in particular in his St. Paul the Traveller and the Roman Citizen and in The Bearing of Recent Discovery on the Trustworthiness of the New Testament. In every instance where discoveries have been made they have confirmed the testimony of Luke as concerning politarchs in Thessalonica, proconsul in Cyprus, etc. The result is that the balance of evidence is now in favour of Luke even when he still stands alone or seems to be opposed by Josephus. Luke, as it stands today, is a more credible historian than Josephus. Ramsay dares to call Luke, all things considered, the greatest of all historians, even above Thucydides. An interesting book on this phase of the subject is Chase's The Credibility of the Acts of the Apostles (1902).

THE PURPOSE OF THE ACTS

It is not easy to say in a word precisely the object of Luke in writing this book. It is not the Acts of all the apostles. Outside of Peter and John little is told of any of them after chapter 11. And all the acts of Peter and John are not given for Peter disappears from the narrative after chapter 15, though he has been the central figure through chapter 11. Paul is not one of the twelve apostles, but Luke follows Paul's career mainly after chapter 8. Stephen and Barnabas come in also. Still (St. Paul on Trial, 1923) argues that Luke meant the book as an apology to be used in Paul's trial at Rome or at any rate to put

Paul in the right light with the Jews in Rome. Hence the full account of Paul's series of defences in Jerusalem, Caesarea, Rome. There may be an element of truth in this idea, but it clearly does not cover the whole purpose of Luke. Others hold that Luke had a dramatic plan to get Paul to Rome as the climax of his campaign to win the Roman Empire to Christ. The book is not a history of all early Christianity. Peter and Paul dominate the atmosphere of the book with Paul as the great hero of Luke. But one can easily see that the work is done with consummate skill. The author is a man of culture, of Christian grace, of literary power. The book pulses with life today.

THE TEXT OF THE ACTS

A special problem arises concerning the text of Acts inasmuch as the Codex Bezae (D) with some other Western support presents a great many additions to the Neutral-Alexandrian text of Aleph A B C. Blass has even proposed the idea that Luke himself issued two editions of the book, an attractive hypothesis that is not generally accepted. J. M. Wilson has published The Acts of the Apostles from Codex Bezae. The whole subject is elaborately treated by J. H. Ropes in Vol. III, The Text of Acts in Part I of The Beginnings of Christianity. Besides thorough discussion of all the problems of text involved Ropes gives the text of the Vatican Codex (B) on the left page and that of Codex Bezae (D) on the right, making comparison easy. Blass's ideas appear in his Acta Apostolorum.

Acts

Verse 1

The Title is simply Acts (Praxeis) in Aleph, Origen, Tertullian, Didymus, Hilary, Eusebius, Epiphanius. The Acts of the Apostles (Praxeis apostolôn) is the reading of B D (Aleph in subscription) Athanasius, Origen, Tertullian, Cyprian, Eusebius, Cyril of Jerusalem, Theodoret, Hilary. The Acts of the Holy Apostles (Praxeis tôn hagiôn apostolôn) is read by A2 E G H A K Chrysostom. It is possible that the book was given no title at all by Luke, for it is plain that usage varied greatly even in the same writers. The long title as found in the Textus Receptus (Authorized Version) is undoubtedly wrong with the adjective "Holy." The reading of B D, "The Acts of the Apostles," may be accepted as probably correct. The former treatise (ton men prôton). Literally, the first treatise. The use of the superlative is common enough and by no means implies, though it allows, a third volume. This use of prôtos where only two are compared is seen between the Baptist and Jesus (John 1:15), John and Peter (John 20:4). The idiom is common in the papyri (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 662, 669). The use of men solitarium here, as Hackett notes, is common in Acts. It is by no means true that men requires a following de by contrast. The word is merely a weakened form of mên=surely, indeed. The reference is to the "first treatise" and merely emphasizes that. The use of logos (word) for treatise or historical narrative is common in ancient Greek as in Herodotus 6 and 9. Plato (Phaedo, p. 61 B) makes a contrast between muthos and logos. I made (epoiêsamên). Aorist middle indicative, the middle being the usual construction for mental acts with poieô. O Theophilus (O Theophile). The interjection O here as is common, though not in Luke 1:3. But the adjective kratiste (most excellent) is wanting here. See remarks on Theophilus on Luke 1:3. Hackett thinks that he lived at Rome because of the way Acts ends. He was a man of rank. He may have defrayed the expense of publishing both Luke and Acts. Perhaps by this time Luke may have reached a less ceremonious acquaintance with Theophilus. Which Jesus began (hôn êrxato Iêsous). The relative is attracted from the accusative ha to the genitive hôn because of the antecedent pantôn (all). The language of Luke here is not merely pleonastic as Winer held. Jesus "began" "both to do and to teach" (poiein te kai didaskein). Note present infinitives, linear action, still going on, and the use of te--kai binds together the life and teachings of Jesus, as if to say that Jesus is still carrying on from heaven the work and teaching of the disciples which he started while on earth before his ascension. The record which Luke now records is really the Acts of Jesus as much as the Acts of the Apostles. Dr. A. T. Pierson called it "The Acts of the Holy Spirit," and that is true also. The Acts, according to Luke, is a continuation of the doings and teachings of Jesus. "The following writings appear intended to give us, and do, in fact, profess to give us, that which Jesus continued to do and teach after the day in which he was taken up" (Bernard, Progress of Doctrine in the N.T.).

Until the day in which (achri hês hêmêras). Incorporation of the antecedent into the relative clause and the change of case hêi (locative) to hês (genitive). Was received up (anelêmphê). First aorist passive indicative of analambanô. Common verb to lift anything up (Acts 10:16) or person as Paul (Acts 20:13). Several times of the Ascension of Jesus to heaven (Mark 16:19; Acts 1:2, 11, 22; 1Ti 3:16) with or without "into heaven" (eis ton ouranon). This same verb is used of Elijah's translation to heaven in the LXX (2Ki 2:11). The same idea, though not this word, is in Luke 24:51. See Luke 9:51 for analêmptis of the Ascension. Had given commandment (enteilamenos). First aorist middle participle of entellô (from en and tellô, to accomplish), usually in the middle, old verb, to enjoin. This special commandment refers directly to what we call the commission given the apostles before Christ ascended on high (John 20:21-23; Mat 28:16-20; Mark 16:15-18; 1Co 15:6; Luke 24:44-49). He had given commands to them when they were first chosen and when they were sent out on the tour of Galilee, but the immediate reference is as above. Through the Holy Spirit (dia pneumatōs hagiou). In his human life Jesus was under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. This applies to the choice of the apostles (Luke 6:13) and to these special commands before the Ascension. Whom he had chosen (hous exelexato). Aorist middle indicative, not past perfect. The same verb (eklexamenos) was used by Luke in describing the choice of the twelve by Jesus (Luke 6:13). But the aorist does not stand "for" our English pluperfect as Hackett says. That is explaining Greek by English. The Western text here adds: "And ordered to proclaim the gospel."

Verse 3

To whom also (hois kai). He chose them and then also manifested himself to these very same men that they might have personal witness to give. Shewed himself alive (parestêsen heauton zônta). To the disciples the first Sunday evening (Mark 16:14; Luke 24:36-43; John 20:19-25), the second Sunday evening (John 20:26-29), at the Sea of Tiberias (John 21:1-23), on the mountain in Galilee (Mat 28:16-20; Mark 16:15-18; 1Co 15:6), to the disciples in Jerusalem and Olivet (Luke 24:44-53; Mark 16-19; Acts 1:1-11). Luke uses this verb paristêmi 13 times in the Acts both transitively and intransitively. It is rendered by various English words (present, furnish, provide, assist, commend). The early disciples including Paul never doubted the fact of the Resurrection, once they were convinced by personal experience. At first some doubted like Thomas (Mark 16:14; Luke 24:41; John 20:24; Mat 28:17). But after that they never wavered in their testimony to their own experience with the Risen Christ, "whereof we are witnesses" Peter said (Acts 3:15). They doubted at first, that we may believe, but at last they risked life itself in defence of this firm faith. After his passion (meta to pathein auton). Neat Greek idiom, meta with the articular infinitive (second aorist active of paschô) and the accusative of general reference, "after the suffering as to him." For pathein used absolutely of Christ's suffering see also Acts 17:3; Acts 26:23. By many proofs (en pollois tekmeriois). Literally, "in many proofs." Tekmêrion is only here in the N.T., though an old and common word in ancient Greek and occurring in the Koin, (papyri, etc.). The verb tekmairô, to prove by sure signs, is from tekmar, a sign. Luke does not hesitate to apply the definite word "proofs" to the evidence for the Resurrection of Christ after full investigation on the part of this scientific historian. Aristotle makes a distinction between tekmêrion (proof) and sêmeion (sign) as does Galen the medical writer. Appearing (optanomenos). Present middle participle from late verb optanô, late Koin, verb from root optô seen in opsomai, ôphthên. In LXX, papyri of second century B.C. (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, p. 83). Only here in the N.T. For optasia for vision see Acts 26:19; Luke 1:22; Luke 24:23. By the space of forty days (di' hêmerôn tesserakonta). At intervals (dia, between) during the forty days, ten appearances being known to us. Jesus was not with them continually now in bodily presence. The period of forty days is given here alone. The Ascension was thus ten days before Pentecost when the Holy Spirit came. Moses was in the mount forty days (Ex 24:18) and Jesus fasted forty days (Mat 4:2). In the Gospel of Luke 24 this separation of forty days between the Resurrection and the Ascension is not drawn. The things concerning the Kingdom of God (ta peri tês basileias tou theou). This phrase appears 33 times in Luke's Gospel, 15 times in Mark, 4 times in Matthew who elsewhere has "the kingdom of heaven," once in John, and 6 times in Acts. No essential distinction is to be drawn between the two for the Jews often used "heaven" rather than "God" to avoid using the Tetragrammaton. But it is noticeable how the word kingdom drops out of Acts. Other words like gospel (euaggelion) take the place of "kingdom." Jesus was fond of the word "kingdom" and Luke is fond of the idiom "the things concerning" (ta peri). Certainly with Jesus the term "kingdom" applies to the present and the future and covers so much that it is not strange that the disciples with their notions of a political Messianic kingdom (Acts 1:6) were slow to comprehend the spiritual nature of the reign of God.

Being assembled together with them (sunalizomenos). Present passive participle from sunalizô, an old verb in Herodotus, Xenophon, etc., from sun, with, and halizô, from halês, crowded. The margin of both the Authorized and the Revised Versions has "eating with them" as if from sun and hals (salt). Salt was the mark of hospitality. There is the verb halisthête en autôi used by Ignatius Ad Magnes. X, "Be ye salted in him." But it is more than doubtful if that is the idea here though the Vulgate does have convescens illis "eating with them," as if that was the common habit of Jesus during the forty days (Wendt, Feine, etc.). Jesus did on occasion eat with the disciples (Luke 24:41-43; Mark 16:14). To wait for the promise of the Father (perimenein tēn epaggelion tou patros). Note present active infinitive, to keep on waiting for (around, peri). In the Great Commission on the mountain in Galilee this item was not given (Mat 28:16-20). It is the subjective genitive, the promise given by the Father (note this Johannine use of the word), that is the Holy Spirit ("the promise of the Holy Spirit," objective genitive). Which ye heard from me (hēn êkousate mou). Change from indirect discourse (command), infinitives chôrizesthai and perimenein after parêggeilen to direct discourse without any ephê (said he) as the English (Italics). Luke often does this (orator ariata). Note also the ablative case of mou (from me). Luke continues in verse Acts 1:5 with the direct discourse giving the words of Jesus.

Verse 5

Baptized with water (ebaptisen hudati) and with the Holy Ghost (en pneumatī baptisthêsesthe hagiōi). The margin has "in the Holy Ghost" (Spirit, it should be). The American Standard Version renders "in" both with "water" and "Holy Spirit" as do Goodspeed (American Translation) and Mrs. Montgomery (Centenary Translation). John's own words (Mat 3:11) to which Jesus apparently refers use en (in) both with water and Spirit. There is a so-called instrumental use of en where we in English have to say "with" (Rev 13:10 en machairêi, like machairêi, Acts 12:2). That is to say en with the locative presents the act as located in a certain instrument like a sword (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 589f.). But the instrumental case is more common without en (the locative and instrumental cases having the same form). So it is often a matter of indifference which idiom is used as in John 21:8 we have tôi ploiariōi (locative without en). They came in (locative case without en) the boat. So in John 1:31 en hudati baptizôn baptizing in water. No distinction therefore can be insisted on here between the construction hudati and en pneumatī (both being in the locative case, one without, one with en). Note unusual position of the verb baptisthêsesthe (future passive indicative) between pneumatī and hagiōi. This baptism of the Holy Spirit was predicted by John (Mat 3:11) as the characteristic of the Messiah's work. Now the Messiah himself in his last message before his Ascension proclaims that in a few days the fulfilment of that prophecy will come to pass. The Codex Bezae adds here "which ye are about to receive" and "until the Pentecost" to verse Acts 1:5. Not many days hence (ou meta pollas tautas hēmeras). A neat Greek idiom difficult to render smoothly into English: "Not after many days these." The litotes (not many=few) is common in Luke (Luke 7:6; Luke 15:13; Acts 17:27; Acts 19:11; Acts 20:12; Acts 21:39; Acts 28:14; Acts 28:2). The predicate use of tautas (without article) is to be noted. "These" really means as a starting point, "from these" (Robertson, Grammar, p. 702). It was ten days hence. This idiom occurs several times in Luke (Luke 24:21; Acts 24:21), as elsewhere (John 4:18; 2Pe 3:1). In Luke 2:12 the copula is easily supplied as it exists in Luke 1:36; Luke 2:2.

Verse 6

They therefore (hoi men oun). Demonstrative use of hoi with men oun without any corresponding de just as in Acts 1:1 men occurs alone. The combination men oun is common in Acts (27 times). Cf. Luke 3:18. The oun is resumptive and refers to the introductory verses (Acts 1:1-5), which served to connect the Acts with the preceding Gospel. The narrative now begins. Asked (êrôtôn). Imperfect active, repeatedly asked before Jesus answered. Lord (kurie). Here not in the sense of "sir" (Mat 21:30), but to Jesus as Lord and Master as often in Acts (Acts 19:5, 10, etc.) and in prayer to Jesus (Acts 7:59). Dost thou restore (ei apokathistaneis). The use of ei in an indirect question is common. We have already seen its use in direct questions (Mat 12:10; Luke 13:23 which see for discussion), possibly in imitation of the Hebrew (frequent in the LXX) or as a partial condition without conclusion. See also Acts 7:1; Acts 19:2; Acts 21:37; Acts 22:25. The form of the verb apokathistanô is late (also apokathistaô) omega form for the old and common apokathistêmi, double compound, to restore to its former state. As a matter of fact the Messianic kingdom for which they are asking is a political kingdom that would throw off the hated Roman yoke. It is a futuristic present and they are uneasy that Jesus may yet fail to fulfil their hopes. Surely here is proof that the eleven apostles needed the promise of the Father before they began to spread the message of the Risen Christ. They still yearn for a political kingdom for Israel even after faith and hope have come back. They need the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit (John 14:1-16:33) and the power of the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:4).

Verse 7

Times or seasons (chronous ê kairous). "Periods" and "points" of time sometimes and probably so here, but such a distinction is not always maintained. See Acts 17:26 for kairous in the same sense as chronous for long periods of time. But here some distinction seems to be called for. It is curious how eager people have always been to fix definite dates about the second coming of Christ as the apostles were about the political Messianic kingdom which they were expecting. Hath set (etheto). Second aorist middle indicative, emphasizing the sovereignty of the Father in keeping all such matters to himself, a gentle hint to people today about the limits of curiosity. Note also "his own" (idiâi) "authority" (exousiâi).

Verse 8

Power (dunamin). Not the "power" about which they were concerned (political organization and equipments for empire on the order of Rome). Their very question was ample proof of their need of this new "power" (dunamin), to enable them (from dunamai, to be able), to grapple with the spread of the gospel in the world. When the Holy Ghost is come upon you (epelthontos tou hagiou pneumatos eph' humas). Genitive absolute and is simultaneous in time with the preceding verb "shall receive" (lêmpsesthe). The Holy Spirit will give them the "power" as he comes upon them. This is the baptism of the Holy Spirit referred to in verse Acts 1:5. My witnesses (mou martures). Correct text. "Royal words of magnificent and Divine assurance" (Furneaux). Our word martyrs is this word martures. In Luke 24:48 Jesus calls the disciples "witnesses to these things" (martures toutôn, objective genitive). In Acts 1:22 an apostle has to be a "witness to the Resurrection" of Christ and in Acts 10:39 to the life and work of Jesus. Hence there could be no "apostles" in this sense after the first generation. But here the apostles are called "my witnesses." "His by a direct personal relationship" (Knowling). The expanding sphere of their witness when the Holy Spirit comes upon them is "unto the uttermost part of the earth" (heôs eschatou tês gês). Once they had been commanded to avoid Samaria (Mat 10:5), but now it is included in the world program as already outlined on the mountain in Galilee (Mat 28:19; Mark 16:15). Jesus is on Olivet as he points to Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, the uttermost (last, eschatou) part of the earth. The program still beckons us on to world conquest for Christ. "The Acts themselves form the best commentary on these words, and the words themselves might be given as the best summary of the Acts" (Page). The events follow this outline (Jerusalem till the end of chapter 7, with the martyrdom of Stephen, the scattering of the saints through Judea and Samaria in chapter 8, the conversion of Saul, chapter 9, the spread of the gospel to Romans in Caesarea by Peter (chapter 10), to Greeks in Antioch (chapter 11), finally Paul's world tours and arrest and arrival in Rome (chapters 11 to 28).

Verse 9

As they were looking (blepontôn autôn). Genitive absolute. The present participle accents the fact that they were looking directly at Jesus. He was taken up ( $\epsilon\pi\rho\theta\eta$ ). First aorist passive indicative of epairô, old and common verb meaning to lift up. In Luke 24:51 we have "he was borne up" (anephereto) and in Acts 1:2; Acts 1:11; 1Ti 3:6 "was received up" (anelêmphê). Received (hupelaben). Second aorist active indicative of hupolambanô, literally here "took under him." He seemed to be supported by the cloud. "In glory" Paul adds in 1Ti 3:16. Out of their sight (apo tôn ophthalmôn autôn). From their eyes (apo with ablative case).

Verse 10

Were looking steadfastly (atenizontes êsan). Periphrastic imperfect active of atenizô, a late intensive verb (intensive a and teinô, to stretch). Common in Acts and also in Luke 4:20; Luke 22:56 as well as Acts 10:4, which see. As he went (poreuomenou autou). Genitive absolute of present middle participle. They saw him slipping away from their eyes as the cloud bore him away. Stood by them (pareistêkeisan autois). Past perfect active indicative of paristêmi and intransitive (note i in B instead of ei for augment, mere itacism).

Verse 11

Who also (hoi kai). Common use of kai pleonastic to show that the two events were parallel. This is the simplest way from Homer on to narrate two parallel events. Why? (ti). Jesus had told them of his coming Ascension (John 6:62; John 20:17) so that they should have been prepared. This Jesus (houtos ho Iêsous). Qui vobis fuit eritque semper Jesus, id est, Salvator (Corn. a Lapide). The personal name assures them that Jesus will always be in heaven a personal friend and divine Saviour (Knowling). So in like manner (houtôs hon tropôn). Same idea twice. "So in which manner" (incorporation of antecedent and accusative of general reference). The fact of his second coming and the manner of it also described by this emphatic repetition.

Verse 12

Olivet (Elaiônos). Genitive singular. Vulgate Olivetum. Made like ampelôn. Here only in the N.T., usually to oros tôn Elaiôn (the Mount of Olives), though some MSS. have Olivet in Luke 19:29; Luke 21:37. Josephus (Ant. VII. 9, 2) has it also and the papyri (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, p. 170). A sabbath day's journey off (Sabbatou echôn hodon). Luke only says here that Olivet is a Sabbath day's journey from Jerusalem, not that Jesus was precisely that distance when he ascended. In the Gospel Luke (Luke 24:50) states that Jesus led them "over against" (heôs pros) Bethany (about two miles or fifteen furlongs). The top of Olivet is six furlongs or three-fourths of a mile. The Greek idiom here is "having a journey of a Sabbath" after "which is nigh unto Jerusalem" (ho estin eggus Ierousalêm), note the periphrastic construction. Why Luke mentions this item for Gentile readers in this form is not known, unless it was in his Jewish source. See Ex 16:29; Num 35:5; Jos 3:4. But it does not contradict what he says in Luke 24:50, where he does not say that Jesus led them all the way to Bethany.

Verse 13

Into the upper chamber (eis to hyperōion). The upstairs or upper room (hyper is upper or over, the adjective hyperōios), the room upstairs where the women staid in Homer, then a room up under the flat roof for retirement or prayer (Acts 9:37, 39), sometimes a large third story room suitable for gatherings (Acts 20:9). It is possible, even probable, that this is the "large upper room" (anōgeon mega) of Mark 14:15; Luke 22:12. The Vulgate has coenaculum for both words. The word is used in the N.T. only in Acts. It was in a private house as in Luke 22:11 and not in the temple as Luke 24:53 might imply, "continually" (dia pantos) these words probably meaning on proper occasions. They were abiding (êsan katamenontes). Periphrastic imperfect active. Perfective use of kata, to abide permanently. It is possible that this is the house of Mary the mother of John Mark where the disciples later met for prayer (Acts 12:12). Here alone in the N.T., though old compound. Some MSS. here read paramenontes. This could mean constant residence, but most likely frequent resort for prayer during these days, some being on hand all the time as they came and went. Simon the Zealot (Simon ho Zêlôtês). Called Simon the Cananaean (ho Cananaios) in Mat 10:4 and Mark 3:18, but Zealot in Luke 6:16 as here giving the Greek equivalent of the Aramaic word because Luke has Gentiles in mind. The epithet (member of the party of Zealots) clung to him after he became an apostle and distinguishes him from Simon Peter. See Vol. I on the Gospel of Matthew for discussion of the four lists of the apostles. Judas the son of James (Joudas Iakôbou). Literally, Judas of James, whether son or brother (cf. Jude 1:1) we do not really know. "Of James" is added to distinguish him from Judas Iscariot (John 14:22). However we take it, he must be identified with the Thaddaeus (=Lebbaeus) of Mark and Matthew to make the list in the third group identical. No name appears in Acts for that of Judas Iscariot.

With one accord (homothumadon). Old adverb in -don from adjective homothumos and that from homos, same, and thumos, mind or spirit, with the same mind or spirit. Common in ancient Greek and papyri. In the N.T. eleven times in Acts and nowhere else save Rom 15:6. See Mat 18:19. Continued (êsan proskarterountes). Periphrastic imperfect active of proskartereô, old verb from pros (perfective use) and kartereô from karteros, strong, steadfast, like the English "carry on." Already in Mark 3:9 which see and several times in Acts and Paul's Epistles. They "stuck to" the praying (têi proseuchêi, note article) for the promise of the Father till the answer came. With the women (sun gunaixin). Associative instrumental case plural of gunê after sun. As one would expect when praying was the chief work on hand. More women certainly included than in Luke 8:2; Mark 15:40; Mat 27:55; Luke 23:49; Mark 15:47; Mat 27:61 Luke 23:55; Mark 16:1; Mat 28:1; Luke 24:1; John 20:1; John 20:11-18; Mat 28:9. There were probably other women also whose testimony was no longer scouted as it had been at first. Codex Bezae adds here "and children." And Mary the mother of Jesus (kai Mariam têi mêtri tou Iêsou). A delicate touch by Luke that shows Mary with her crown of glory at last. She had come out of the shadow of death with the song in her heart and with the realization of the angel's promise and the prophecy of Simeon. It was a blessed time for Mary. With his brethren (sun tois adelphois autou). With his brothers, it should be translated. They had once disbelieved in him (John 7:5). Jesus had appeared to James (1Co 15:7) and now it is a happy family of believers including the mother and brothers (half-brothers, literally) of Jesus. They continue in prayer for the power from on high.

Verse 15

Brethren (adelphôn). Codex Bezae has "disciples." Multitude of persons (ochlos onomatôn). Literally, multitude of names. This Hebraistic use of onoma=person occurs in the LXX (Num 1:2; Num 18:20; Num 3:40, 43; Num 26:53) and in Rev 3:4; Rev 11:13. Together (epi to auto). The word "gathered" is not in the Greek here, but it does occur in Mat 22:34 and that is undoubtedly the idea in Luke 17:35 as in Acts 2:1, 44, 47; 1Co 11:20; 1Co 14:23. So also here. They were in the same place (to auto). About a hundred and twenty (hôs hekaton eikosi). A crowd for "the upper room." No special significance in the number 120, just the number there.

Verse 16

Brethren (andres adelphoi). Literally, men, brethren or brother men. More dignified and respectful than just "brethren." Demosthenes sometimes said Andres Athênaioi. Cf. our "gentlemen and fellow-citizens." Women are included in this address though andres refers only to men. It was needful (edei). Imperfect tense of the impersonal dei with the infinitive clause (first aorist passive) and the accusative of general reference as a loose subject. Peter here assumes that Jesus is the Messiah and finds scripture illustrative of the treachery of Judas. He applies it to Judas and quotes the two passages in verse Acts 1:20 (Ps 69:25; Ps 109:8). The Holy Spirit has not yet come upon them, but Peter feels moved to interpret the situation. He feels that his mind is opened by Jesus (Luke 24:45). It is a logical, not a moral, necessity that Peter points out. Peter here claims the Holy Spirit as speaking in the scriptures as he does in 2Pe 1:21. His description of Judas as "guide" (hodêgou) to those who seized (sullabousin) Jesus is that of the base traitor that he was. This very verb occurs in Luke 22:54 of the arrest of Jesus.

Verse 17

Was numbered (katêrithmenos ên). Periphrastic past perfect passive indicative of katarithmeô, old verb, but here only in the N.T. (perfective use of kata). Received his portion (elachen ton klêron). Second aorist active indicative of lagchanô, old verb, to obtain by lot as in Luke 1:9; John 19:24, especially by divine appointment as here and 2Pe 2:1. Klêros also means lot, an object used in casting lots (Acts 1:26), or what is obtained by lot as here and Acts 8:21, of eternal salvation (Acts 26:18; Col 1:12), of persons chosen by divine appointment (1Pe 5:3). From this latter usage the Latin cleros, clericus, our clergy, one chosen by divine lot. So Peter says that Judas "obtained by lot the lot of this ministry" (diakonias) which he had when he betrayed Jesus. The Master chose him and gave him his opportunity.

Verse 18

Now this man (Houtos men oun). Note men oun again without a corresponding de as in Acts 1:6. Verses Acts 1:18, 19 are a long parenthesis of Luke by way of explanation of the fate of Judas. In verse Acts 1:20 Peter resumes and quotes the scripture to which he referred in verse Acts 1:16. Obtained (ektêsato). First aorist middle indicative of ptaomai, to acquire, only in the middle, to get for oneself. With the covenant money for the betrayal, acquired it indirectly apparently according to Mat 26:14-16; Mat 27:3-8 which see. Falling headlong (prênês genomenos). Attic form usually pranês. The word means, not "headlong," but "flat on the face" as opposed to huptios on the back (Hackett). Hackett observes that the place suits admirably the idea that Judas hung himself (Mat 27:5) and, the rope breaking, fell flat on his face and burst asunder in the midst (elakêsen mesos). First aorist active indicative of laskô old verb (here only in the N.T.), to clang, to crack, to crash, like a falling tree. Aristophanes uses it of crashing bones. Mesos is predicate nominative referring to Judas. Gushed out (exechuthê). First aorist passive indicative of ekcheô, to pour out.

Verse 19

Language (dialektôi). Not a dialect of the Greek, but a different language, the Aramaic. So also in Acts 2:6; Acts 21:40. Dialektos is from dialegomai, to converse, to speak between two (dia). Akeldama (Hakeldamach). This Aramaic word Peter explains as "the field of blood." Two traditions are preserved: one in Mat 27:7 which explains that the priests purchased this potter's field with the money which Judas flung down as the price of the blood of Jesus. The other in Acts describes it as the field of blood because Judas poured out his blood there. Hackett and Knowling argue that both views can be true. "The ill-omened name could be used with a double emphasis" (Hackett).

Verse 20

For it is written (gegraptai gar). Luke here returns to the address of Peter interrupted by verses Acts 1:18, 19. Perfect passive indicative, the usual idiom in quoting scripture, stands written. Ps 69:1-36 is often quoted as Messianic in Matthew and John. His habitation (hê epaulis autou). Only here in the N.T., a country house, cottage, cabin. His office (tên episkopên autou). Our word bishopric (Authorized Version) is from this word, office of bishop (episcopos). Only that is not the idea here, but over-seership (epi, skopeô) or office as in 1Pe 2:12. It means to visit and to inspect, to look over. The ecclesiastical sense comes later (1Ti 3:1).

Verse 21

Must (dei). Present necessity corresponding to the old necessity (edei) about Judas (verse Acts 1:16). This sentence in verses Acts 1:21, 22 begins with dei. That (hôi). Locative case of the relative attracted to the case of the antecedent. Went in and went out (eisêlthen kai exêlthen). Constativ aorist active. With us (eph' hêmas). Over us, the margin has it. But the full phrase would be eph' hêmas kai aph' hêmôn. He came to us and went from us (Knowing).

Verse 22

Beginning (arxamenos). Aorist middle participle of archô, agreeing (nominative) with ho kurios Iêsous (the Lord Jesus). The ministry of Jesus began with the ministry of John. Strictly speaking arxamenos should be the accusative and agree with martura (witness) in verse Acts 1:22, but the construction is a bit free. The ministry of Jesus began with the baptism of John and lasted until the Ascension. A witness with us of his resurrection (martura tês anastaseôs autou sun hêmin). This Peter considers the essential thing in a successor to Judas. The one chosen should be a personal witness who can speak from his own experience of the ministry, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus. One can easily see that this qualification will soon put an end to those who bear such personal testimony.

Verse 23

They put forward two (estêsan duo). First aorist active indicative (transitive) of histêmi (not intransitive second aorist, though same form in the third person plural). Somebody nominated two names, Justus and Matthias.

Verse 24

Show us the one whom thou hast chosen (anadeixon hon exelexô). First aorist active imperative of anadeiknumi, to show up, make plain. First aorist middle indicative second person singular of eklegô, to pick out, choose, select. In this prayer they assume that God has made a choice. They only wish to know his will. They call God the heart-searcher or heart-knower (kardiognôsta, vocative singular), a late word, here and Acts 15:8 only in the N.T. Modern physicians have delicate apparatus for studying the human heart.

Verse 25

Apostleship (apostolês). Jesus had called the twelve apostles. An old word for sending away, then for a release, then the office and dignity of an apostle (Acts 1:25; Rom 1:5; 1Co 9:2; Gal 2:8). To his own place (eis ton topon ton idion). A bold and picturesque description of the destiny of Judas worthy of Dante's Inferno. There is no doubt in Peter's mind of the destiny of Judas nor of his own guilt. He made ready his own berth and went to it.

Verse 26

He was numbered (sunkatepsêphisthê). To the Jews the lot did not suggest gambling, but "the O.T. method of learning the will of Jehovah" (Furneaux). The two nominations made a decision necessary and they appealed to God in this way. This double compound sunkatapsêphizô occurs here alone in the N.T. and elsewhere only in Plutarch (Them. 21) in the middle voice for condemning with others. Sunpsêphizô occurs in the middle voice in Acts 19:19 for counting up money and also in Aristophanes. Psêphizô with dapanên occurs in Luke 14:28 for counting the cost and in Rev 13:18 for "counting" the number of the beast. The ancients used pebbles (psêphoi) in voting, black for condemning, white (Rev 2:17) in acquitting. Here it is used in much the same sense as katarithmeô in verse Acts 1:17.

Was now come (en tôi sunplêrousthai). Luke's favourite idiom of en with the articular present infinitive passive and the accusative of general reference, "in the being fulfilled completely (perfective use of sun-) as to the day of Pentecost." Common verb, but only in Luke in N.T. In literal sense of filling a boat in Luke 8:23, about days in Luke 9:51 as here. Whether the disciples expected the coming of the Holy Spirit on this day we do not know. Blass holds that the present tense shows that the day had not yet come. It is a Hebrew idiom (Ex 7:25) and Luke may mean that the day of Pentecost was not yet over, was still going on, though Hackett takes it for the interval (fifty days) between Passover and Pentecost. Apparently this day of Pentecost fell on the Jewish Sabbath (our Saturday). It was the feast of first fruits. All together in one place (pantes homou epi to auto). All together in the same place. Note homou here (correct text), not homothumadon as in Acts 1:14, and so a bit of tautology.

Verse 2

Suddenly (apnô). Old adverb, but in the N.T. only in Acts (Acts 2:2; Acts 16:26; Acts 28:6). Kin to exaiphnês (Acts 22:6). A sound (êchos). Our echo. Old word, already in Luke 4:37 for rumour and Luke 21:25 for the roar of the sea. It was not wind, but a roar or reverberation "as of the rushing of a mighty wind" (hôsper pheromenês pnoês biaias). This is not a strict translation nor is it the genitive absolute. It was "an echoing sound as of a mighty wind borne violently" (or rushing along like the whirr of a tornado). Pnoê (wind) is used here (in the N.T. only here and Acts 17:25 though old word) probably because of the use of pneuma in verse Acts 2:4 of the Holy Spirit. In John 3:5-8 pneuma occurs for both wind and Spirit. Filled (eplêrôsen). "As a bath is filled with water, that they might be baptized with the Holy Ghost, in fulfilment of Acts 1:5" (Canon Cook). They were sitting (êsan kathêmenoi). Periphrastic imperfect middle of kathêmai.

Verse 3

Parting asunder (diamerizomenai). Present middle (or passive) participle of diamerizô, old verb, to cleave asunder, to cut in pieces as a butcher does meat (aorist passive in Luke 11:17). So middle here would mean, parting themselves asunder or distributing themselves. The passive voice would be "being distributed." The middle is probably correct and means that "the fire-like appearance presented itself at first, as it were, in a single body, and then suddenly parted in this direction and that; so that a portion of it rested on each of those present" (Hackett). The idea is not that each tongue was cloven, but each separate tongue looked like fire, not real fire, but looking like (hōsei, as if) fire. The audible sign is followed by a visible one (Knowling). "Fire had always been, with the Jews, the symbol of the Divine presence (cf. Ex 3:2; Deut 5:4). No symbol could be more fitting to express the Spirit's purifying energy and refining energy" (Furneaux). The Baptist had predicted a baptizing by the Messiah in the Holy Spirit and in fire (Mat 3:11). It sat (ekathisen). Singular verb here, though plural ôphthêsan with tongues (glôssai). A tongue that looked like fire sat upon each one.

Verse 4

With other tongues (heterais glôssais). Other than their native tongues. Each one began to speak in a language that he had not acquired and yet it was a real language and understood by those from various lands familiar with them. It was not jargon, but intelligible language. Jesus had said that the gospel was to go to all the nations and here the various tongues of earth were spoken. One might conclude that this was the way in which the message was to be carried to the nations, but future developments disprove it. This is a third miracle (the sound, the tongues like fire, the untaught languages). There is no blinking the fact that Luke so pictures them. One need not be surprised if this occasion marks the fulfilment of the Promise of the Father. But one is not to confound these miraculous signs with the Holy Spirit. They are merely proof that he has come to carry on the work of his dispensation. The gift of tongues came also on the house of Cornelius at Caesarea (Acts 10:44-47; Acts 11:15-17), the disciples of John at Ephesus (Acts 19:6), the disciples at Corinth (1Co 14:1-33). It is possible that the gift appeared also at Samaria (Acts 8:18). But it was not a general or a permanent gift. Paul explains in 1Co 14:22 that "tongues" were a sign to unbelievers and were not to be exercised unless one was present who understood them and could translate them. This restriction disposes at once of the modern so-called tongues which are nothing but jargon and hysteria. It so happened that here on this occasion at Pentecost there were Jews from all parts of the world, so that some one would understand one tongue and some another without an interpreter such as was needed at Corinth. The experience is identical in all four instances and they are not for edification or instruction, but for adoration and wonder and worship. As the Spirit gave them utterance (kathôs to pneuma edidou apophtheggesthai autois). This is precisely what Paul claims in 1Co 12:10, 28, but all the same without an interpreter the gift was not to be exercised (1Co 14:6-19). Paul had the gift of tongues, but refused to exercise it except as it would be understood. Note the imperfect tense here (edidou). Perhaps they did not all speak at once, but one after another. Apophtheggesthai is a late verb (LXX of prophesying, papyri). Lucian uses it of the ring of a vessel when it strikes a reef. It is used of eager, elevated, impassioned utterance. In the N.T. only here, verse Acts 2:14; Acts 26:25. Apophthegm is from this verb.

Were dwelling (êsan katoikountes). Periphrastic imperfect active indicative. Usually katoikeô means residence in a place (Acts 4:16; Acts 7:24; Acts 9:22, 32) as in verse Acts 2:14 (Luke 13:4). Perhaps some had come to Jerusalem to live while others were here only temporarily, for the same word occurs in verse Acts 2:9 of those who dwell in Mesopotamia, etc. Devout (eulabeis). Reverent (eu, well, lambanô, to take). See on Luke 2:25 like Simeon waiting for the consolation of Israel or hoping to die and be buried in the Holy City and also Acts 8:2.

Verse 6

When this sound was heard (genomenês tês phônês tautês). Genitive absolute with aorist middle participle. Note phônê this time, not êcho as in verse Acts 2:1. Phônê originally meant sound as of the wind (John 3:8) or an instrument (1Co 14:7, 8, 10), then voice of men. The meaning seems to be that the excited "other tongues" of verse Acts 2:4 were so loud that the noise drew the crowd together. The house where the 120 were may have been (Hackett) on one of the avenues leading to the temple. Were confounded (sunchuthê). First aorist passive indicative of suncheô or sunchunô, to pour together precisely like the Latin confundo, to confound. The Vulgate has it mente confusa est. It is an old verb, but in the N.T. only in Acts five times (Acts 2:6; Acts 9:22; Acts 19:32; Acts 21:27, 31). In his own language (têi idiâi dialektôi). Locative case. Each one could understand his own language when he heard that. Every one that came heard somebody speaking in his native tongue.

Verse 7

Were amazed (existanto). Imperfect middle of existêmi, to stand out of themselves, wide-open astonishment. Marvelled (ethaumazon). Imperfect active. The wonder grew and grew. Galileans (Galilaioi). There were few followers of Jesus as yet from Jerusalem. The Galileans spoke a rude Aramaic (Mark 14:70) and probably crude Greek vernacular also. They were not strong on language and yet these are the very people who now show such remarkable linguistic powers. These people who have come together are all Jews and therefore know Aramaic and the vernacular Koin, but there were various local tongues "wherein we were born" (en hêi egennêthêmen). An example is the Lycaonian (Acts 14:11). These Galilean Christians are now heard speaking these various local tongues. The lists in verses Acts 2:9-11 are not linguistic, but geographical and merely illustrate how widespread the Dispersion (Diaspora) of the Jews was as represented on this occasion. Jews were everywhere, these "Jews among the nations" (Acts 21:21). Page notes four main divisions here: (1) The Eastern or Babylonian, like the Parthians, Medes, Elamites, Mesopotamians. (2) The Syrian like Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia. (3) The Egyptian like Egypt, Libya, Cyrene. (4) The Roman. Jews and proselytes (prosêlutoi). These last from proserchomai, to come to, to join, Gentile converts to Judaism (circumcision, baptism, sacrifice). This proselyte baptism was immersion as is shown by I. Abrahams (Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels, p. 38). Many remained uncircumcised and were called proselytes of the gate.

Verse 11

Cretes and Arabians. These two groups "seem to have been added to the list as an afterthought" (Knowling). Crete is an island to itself and Arabia was separate also though near Judea and full of Jews. The point is not that each one of these groups of Jews spoke a different language, but that wherever there was a local tongue they heard men speaking in it. We do hear them speaking (akouomen lalountôn autôn). Genitive case autôn with akouô the participle lalountôn agreeing with autôn, a sort of participial idiom of indirect discourse (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1040ff.). The mighty works (ta megaleia). Old adjective for magnificent. In LXX, but only here (not genuine in Luke 1:49) in the N.T. Cf. 2Pe 1:16 for megaleiotês (majesty).

Verse 12

Were perplexed (diêporounto). Imperfect middle of diaporeô (dia, a privative, poros) to be wholly at a loss. Old verb, but in N.T. only in Luke and Acts. They continued amazed (existanto) and puzzled. What meaneth this? (Ti thelei touto einai). Literally, what does this wish to be?

Verse 13

Mocking (diachleuazontes). Old verb, but only here in the N.T., though the simple verb (without dia) in Acts 17:32. Chleuê means a joke. With new wine (gleukous). Sweet wine, but intoxicating. Sweet wine kept a year was very intoxicating. Genitive case here after memestômenoi eisin (periphrastic perfect passive indicative), old verb mestoô, only here in the N.T. Tanked up with new wine, state of fulness.

Verse 14

Standing up with the eleven (statheis sun tois hendeka). Took his stand with the eleven including Matthias, who also rose up with them, and spoke as their spokesman, a formal and impressive beginning. The Codex Bezae has "ten apostles." Luke is fond of this pictorial use of statheis (first aorist passive participle of histêmi) as seen nowhere else in the N.T. (Luke 18:11, 40; Luke 19:8; Acts 5:20; Acts 17:22; Acts 27:21). Lifted up his voice (epêren tèn phônên autou). This phrase only in Luke in the N.T. (Luke 11:29; Acts 2:14; Acts 14:11; Acts 22:22), but is common in the old writers. First aorist active indicative of epairô. The large crowd and the confusion of tongues demanded loud speaking. "This most solemn, earnest, yet sober speech" (Bengel). Codex Bezae adds "first" after "voice." Peter did it to win and hold attention. Give ear unto my words (enôtisasthe ta rhêmata mou). Late verb in LXX and only here in the N.T. First aorist middle from enôtizomai (en, ous, ear) to give ear to, receive into the ear. People's ears differ greatly, but in public speech they have to be reached through the ear. That puts an obligation on the speaker and also on the auditors who should sit where they can hear with the ears which they have, an obligation often overlooked.

Verse 15

As ye suppose (hôs humeis hupolambanete). Note use of humeis (ye) for decided emphasis. The third hour (hôra tritê). Three o'clock in the day Jewish time, nine Roman. Drunkenness belongs to the night (1Th 5:7). It was a quick, common sense reply, and complete answer to their suspicion.

Verse 16

This is that which hath been spoken by the prophet Joel (touto estin to eirêmenon dia tou prophêtou Iôêl). Positive interpretation of the supernatural phenomena in the light of the Messianic prophecy of Joel 2:28-32. Peter's mind is now opened by the Holy Spirit to understand the Messianic prophecy and the fulfilment right before their eyes. Peter now has spiritual insight and moral courage. The power (dunamis) of the Holy Spirit has come upon him as he proceeds to give the first interpretation of the life and work of Jesus Christ since his Ascension. It is also the first formal apology for Christianity to a public audience. Peter rises to the height of his powers in this remarkable sermon. Jesus had foretold that he would be a Rock and now he is no longer shale, but a solid force for aggressive Christianity. He follows here in verses Acts 2:17-21 closely the LXX text of Joel and then applies the passage to the present emergency (Acts 2:22-24).

Verse 17

In the last days (en tais eschatais hêmerais). Joel does not have precisely these words, but he defines "those days" as being "the day of the Lord" (cf. Isa 2:2; Mic 4:1). I will pour forth (ekcheô). Future active indicative of ekcheô. This future like edomai and piomai is without tense sign, probably like the present in the futuristic sense (Robertson, Grammar, p. 354). Westcott and Hort put a different accent on the future, but the old Greek had no accent. The old Greek had ekcheusô. This verb means to pour out. Of my Spirit (apo tou pneumatos). This use of apo (of) is either because of the variety in the manifestations of the Spirit (1Co 12:1-31) or because the Spirit in his entirety remains with God (Holtzmann, Wendt). But the Hebrew has it: "I will pour out my Spirit" without the partitive idea in the LXX. And your daughters (kai hai thugateres hûmôn). Anna is called a prophetess in Luke 2:36 and the daughters of Philip prophesy (Acts 21:9) and verse Acts 2:18 (handmaidens). See also 1Co 11:5 (prophêtousa). Visions (horaseis). Late word for the more common horama, both from horaô, to see. In Rev 4:3 it means appearance, but in Rev 9:17 as here an ecstatic revelation or vision. Dream dreams (enupniois enupniasthêsontai). Shall dream with (instrumental case) dreams. First future passive of enupniazô from enupnios (en and hupnos, in sleep), a common late word. Only here in the N.T. (this from Joel as all these verses Acts 2:17-21 are) and Jude 1:8. Yea and (kai ge). Intensive particle ge added to kai (and), an emphatic addition (=Hebrew vegam). Servants (doulous), handmaidens (doulas). Slaves, actual slaves of men. The humblest classes will receive the Spirit of God (cf. 1Co 1:26-31). But the word "prophesy" here is not in the LXX (or the Hebrew).

Verse 19

Wonders (terata). Apparently akin to the verb têreô, to watch like a wonder in the sky, miracle (miraculum), marvel, portent. In the New Testament the word occurs only in the plural and only in connection with sêmeia (signs) as here and in verse Acts 2:43. But signs (sêmeia) here is not in the LXX. See on Mat 11:20. In verse Acts 2:22 all three words occur together: powers, wonders, signs (dunamesi, terasi, sêmeiois). As above (anô). This word is not in the LXX nor is "beneath" (katô), both probably being added to make clearer the contrast between heaven and earth. Blood and fire and vapour of smoke (haima kai pur kai atmida kapnou). A chiasm as these words illustrate bloodshed and destruction by fire as signs here on earth.

Verse 20

Shall be turned (metastraphêsetai). Second future passive of metastrephô, common verb, but only three times in the N.T. (Acts 2:20 from Joel; Jas 4:9; Gal 1:7). These are the "wonders" or portents of verse Acts 2:19. It is worth noting that Peter interprets these "portents" as fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost, though no such change of the sun into darkness or of the moon into blood is recorded. Clearly Peter does not interpret the symbolism of Joel in literal terms. This method of Peter may be of some service in the Book of Revelation where so many apocalyptic symbols occur as well as in the great Eschatological Discourse of Jesus in Mat 24; Mat 25. In Mat 24:6, 29 Jesus had spoken of wars on earth and wonders in heaven. Before the day of the Lord come, that great and notable day (prin elthein hêmeran kuriou tèn megalên kai epiphânê). The use of prin with the infinitive and the accusative of general reference is a regular Greek idiom. The use of the adjectives with the article is also good Greek, though the article is not here repeated as in Acts 1:25. The Day of the Lord is a definite conception without the article. Notable (epiphânê) is the same root as epiphany (epiphaneia) used of the Second Coming of Christ (2Th 2:8; 1Ti 6:14; 2Ti 4:1; Tit 2:13). It translates here the Hebrew word for "terrible." In the Epistles the Day of the Lord is applied (Knowling) to the Coming of Christ for judgment (1Th 5:2; 1Co 1:8; 2Co 1:14; Php 1:10).

Verse 21

Shall call on (epikalesêtai). First aorist middle subjunctive of epikaleô, common verb, to call to, middle voice for oneself in need. Indefinite relative clause with ean and so subjunctive, punctiliar idea, in any single case, and so aorist.

Verse 22

Hear these words (akousate tous logous toutous). Do it now (aorist tense). With unerring aim Peter has found the solution for the phenomena. He has found the key to God's work on this day in his words through Joel. as ye yourselves know (kathôs autoi oidate).

Note autoi for emphasis. Peter calls the audience to witness that his statements are true concerning "Jesus the Nazarene." He wrought his miracles by the power of God in the midst of these very people here present.

Verse 23

Him (touton). "This one," resumptive and emphatic object of "did crucify and slay." Being delivered up (ekdoton). Verbal adjective from ekdidômi, to give out or over. Old word, but here only in the N.T. Delivered up by Judas, Peter means. By the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (têi hôrismenêi boulêi kai prognôsêi tou theou). Instrumental case. Note both purpose (boulê) and foreknowledge (prognôsis) of God and "determined" (hôrismenê, perfect passive participle, state of completion). God had willed the death of Jesus (John 3:16) and the death of Judas (Acts 1:16), but that fact did not absolve Judas from his responsibility and guilt (Luke 22:22). He acted as a free moral agent. By the hand (dia cheiros). Luke is fond of these figures (hand, face, etc.) very much like the Hebrew though the vernacular of all languages uses them. Lawless men (anomôn). Men without law, who recognize no law for their conduct, like men in high and low stations today who defy the laws of God and man. Old word, very common in the LXX. Ye did crucify (prospêxantes). First aorist active participle of prospêgnumi, rare compound word in Dio Cassius and here only in the N.T. One must supply tôi staurôi and so it means "fastened to the cross," a graphic picture like Paul's "nailed to the cross" (prosêlôsas tôi staurôi) in Col 2:14. Did slay (aneilate). Second aorist active indicative with first aorist vowel a instead of o as is common in the Koin,. This verb anaireô, to take up, is often used for kill as in Acts 12:2. Note Peter's boldness now under the power of the Holy Spirit. He charges the people to their faces with the death of Christ.

Verse 24

God raised up (ho theos anestêsen). Est hoc summum orationis (Blass). Apparently this is the first public proclamation to others than believers of the fact of the Resurrection of Jesus. "At a time it was still possible to test the statement, to examine witnesses, to expose fraud, the Apostle openly proclaimed the Resurrection as a fact, needing no evidence, but known to his hearers" (Furneaux). The pangs of death (tas ôdinas tou thanatou). Codex Bezae has "Hades" instead of death. The LXX has ôdinas thanatou in Ps 18:4, but the Hebrew original means "snares" or "traps" or "cords" of death where sheol and death are personified as hunters laying snares for prey. How Peter or Luke came to use the old Greek word ôdinas (birth pangs) we do not know. Early Christian writers interpreted the Resurrection of Christ as a birth out of death. "Loosing" (lusas) suits better the notion of "snares" held a prisoner by death, but birth pangs do bring deliverance to the mother also. Because (kathoti). This old conjunction (kata, hoti) occurs in the N.T. only in Luke's writings. That he should be holden (krateisthai auton). Infinitive present passive with accusative of general reference and subject of ên adunaton. The figure goes with "loosed" (lusas) above.

Verse 25

Concerning him (eis auton). Peter interprets Ps 16:8-11 as written by David and with reference to the Messiah. There is but one speaker in this Psalm and both Peter here and Paul in Acts 13:36 make it the Messiah. David is giving his own experience which is typical of the Messiah (Knowling). I beheld (proorômên). Imperfect middle without augment of prooraô, common verb, but only twice in the N.T., to see beforehand (Acts 21:29) or to see right before one as here. This idea of pro- is made plainer by "before my face" (enôpion mou). On my right hand (ek dexiôn mou). The Lord Jehovah like a defender or advocate stands at David's right hand as in trials in court (Ps 109:31). That (hina) here is almost result. Moved (saleuthô). First aorist passive subjunctive of saleuô, to shake like an earthquake.

Verse 26

Was glad (êuphranthê). First aorist (timeless here like the Hebrew perfect) passive indicative of euphrainô (cf. Luke 15:32). Timeless also is "rejoiced" (êgalliasato). Shall dwell (kataskênôsei). Shall tabernacle, pitch a tent, make one's abode (cf. Mat 13:32). See on Mat 8:20 about kataskênôseis (nests) In hope (ep' elpidi). On hope, the hope of the resurrection.

Verse 27

In Hades (eis Hâidên). Hades is the unseen world, Hebrew Sheol, but here it is viewed as death itself "considered as a rapacious destroyer" (Hackett). It does not mean the place of punishment, though both heaven and the place of torment are in Hades (Luke 16:23). "Death and Hades are strictly parallel terms: he who is dead is in Hades" (Page). The use of eis here=en is common enough. The Textus Receptus here reads eis Hâidou (genitive case) like the Attic idiom with domon (abode) understood. "Hades" in English is not translation, but transliteration. The phrase in the Apostles' Creed, "descended into hell" is from this passage in Acts (Hades, not Gehenna). The English word "hell" is Anglo-Saxon from helan, to hide, and was used in the Authorized Version to translate both Hades as here and Gehenna as in Mat 5:22. Thy Holy One (ton hosion sou). Peter applies these words to the Messiah. Corruption (diaphthoran). The word can mean destruction or putrefaction from diaphtheirô, old word, but in N.T. only here and Acts 13:34-37. The Hebrew word in Ps 16:1-11 can mean also the pit or the deep.

Verse 28

The ways of life (hodous zôês). Though dead God will show him the ways back to life.

Verse 29

I may say (exon eipein). Supply estin before exon, periphrastic present indicative of exeimi, to allow, permit. The Authorized Version has "Let me speak," supplying esto present imperative. Freely (meta parrêsias). Telling it all (pan, rhêsia from eipon, to speak), with fulness, with boldness. Luke is fond of the phrase (as in Acts 4:13). It is a new start for Simon Peter, full of boldness and courage. The patriarch (tou patriarchou). Transliteration of the word, from patria, family, and archô, to rule, the founder of a family. Late word in LXX. Used of Abraham (Heb 7:4), of the twelve sons of Jacob as founders of the several tribes (Acts 7:8), and here of David as head of the family from whom the Messiah comes. Was buried (etaphê). Second aorist passive indicative of thaptô. His tomb was on Mt. Zion where most of the kings were buried. The tomb was said to have fallen into ruins in the time of the Emperor Hadrian. Josephus (Ant. XVI. 7, 1) attributes most of the misfortunes of Herod's family to the fact that he tried to rifle the tomb of David.

Verse 31

Foreseeing (proidôn). Second aorist active participle. Did it as a prophet. Of the Christ (tou Christou). Of the Messiah. See under verse Acts 2:32. This is a definite statement by Peter that David knew that in Ps 16:1-11 he was describing the resurrection of the Messiah.

Verse 32

This Jesus (touton ton Iêsoun). Many of the name "Jesus," but he means the one already called "the Nazarene" (verse Acts 2:22) and foretold as the Messiah in Ps 16:1-11 and raised from the dead by God in proof that he is the Messiah (Acts 2:24, 32), "this Jesus whom ye crucified" (verse Acts 2:36). Other terms used of him in the Acts are the Messiah, verse Acts 2:31, the one whom God "anointed" (Acts 10:38), as in John 1:41, Jesus Christ (Acts 9:34). In Acts 2:36 God made this Jesus Messiah, in Acts 3:20 the Messiah Jesus, in Acts 17:3 Jesus is the Messiah, in Acts 18:5 the Messiah is Jesus, in Acts 24:24 Christ Jesus. Whereof (hou). Or "of whom." Either makes sense and both are true. Peter claims the whole 120 as personal witnesses to the fact of the Resurrection of Jesus from the dead and they are all present as Peter calls them to witness on the point. In Galilee over 500 had seen the Risen Christ at one time (1Co 15:6) most of whom were still living when Paul wrote. Thus the direct evidence for the resurrection of Jesus piles up in cumulative force.

Verse 33

By the right hand of God (têi dexiâi tou theou). This translation makes it the instrumental case. The margin has it "at" instead of "by," that is the locative case. And it will make sense in the true dative case, "to the right hand of God." These three cases came to have the same form in Greek. Rom 8:24 furnishes another illustration of like ambiguity (têi elpidi), saved by hope, in hope, or for hope. Usually it is quite easy to tell the case when the form is identical. Exalted (hupsôtheis). First aorist passive participle of hupsoô, to lift up. Here both the literal and tropical sense occurs. Cf. John 12:32. The promise of the Holy Spirit (tên epaggelian tou pneumatou tou hagiou). The promise mentioned in Acts 1:4 and now come true, consisting in the Holy Spirit "from the Father" (para tou patros), sent by the Father and by the Son (John 15:26; John 16:7). See also Gal 3:14. He hath poured forth (execheen). Aorist active indicative of ekcheô the verb used by Joel and quoted by Peter already in verses Acts 2:17, 18. Jesus has fulfilled his promise. This which ye see and hear (touto ho humeis kai blepete kai akouete). This includes the sound like the rushing wind, the tongues like fire on each of them, the different languages spoken by the 120. "The proof was before their eyes in this new energy from heaven" (Furneaux), a culminating demonstration that Jesus was the Messiah.

Verse 34

Ascended not (ou--anebê). It is more emphatic than that: For not David ascended into the heavens. Peter quotes Ps 110:1 as proof. No passage in the O.T. is so constantly quoted as Messianic as this. "St. Peter does not demand belief upon his own assertion, but he again appeals to the Scriptures, and to words which could not have received a fulfilment in the case of David" (Knowling). Sit thou (kathou). Late Koin, form for earlier kathêso, present middle imperative second singular of kathêmai.

Verse 35

Till I make (heôs an thô). Second aorist active subjunctive of tithêmi with an after heôs for the future, a common Greek idiom. This dominion of Christ as Mediator will last till the plan of the kingdom is carried out (1Co 15:23-28). Complete subjugation will come, perhaps referring to the custom of victorious kings placing their feet upon the necks of their enemies (Jos 10:24). Therefore assuredly (Asphalôs oun). Assuredly therefore, without any slip or trip (asphalês from a privative and sphallô, to trip, to slip. Peter draws a powerfully pungent conclusion by the use of the adverb asphalôs and the inferential conjunction oun. Peter's closing sentence drives home the point of his sermon: "This very Jesus whom ye crucified (note humeis, strongly emphatic ye), him God made both Lord and Messiah" (kai kurion kai Christon), as David foretold in Ps 110:1-7 and as the events of this day have confirmed. The critics are disturbed over how Luke could have gotten the substance of this masterful address spoken on the spur of the moment with passion and power. They even say that Luke composed it for Peter and put the words in his mouth. If so, he made a good job of it. But Peter could have written out the notes of the address afterwards. Luke had plenty of chances to get hold of it from Peter or from others.

Verse 37

They were pricked in their heart (katenugêsan tên kardian). Second aorist indicative of katanussô, a rare verb (LXX) to pierce, to sting sharply, to stun, to smite. Homer used it of horses dinting the earth with their hoofs. The substantive katanuxis occurs in Rom 11:8. Here only in the N.T. It is followed here by the accusative of the part affected, the heart. What shall we do? (Ti poiêsômen). Deliberative subjunctive first aorist active. The sermon went home, they felt the sting of Peter's words, compunction (compungo). Codex Bezae adds: "Show us."

Verse 38

Repent ye (metanoêsate). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative. Change your mind and your life. Turn right about and do it now. You crucified this Jesus. Now crowns him in your hearts as Lord and Christ. This first. And be baptized every one of you (kai baptisthêtô hekastos hûmôn). Rather, "And let each one of you be baptized." Change of number from plural to singular and of person from second to third. This change marks a break in the thought here that the English translation does not preserve. The first thing to do is make a radical and complete change of heart and life. Then let each one be baptized after this change has taken place, and the act of baptism be performed "in the name of Jesus Christ" (en tôi onomati Iêsou Christou). In accordance with the command of Jesus in Mat 28:19 (eis to onoma). No distinction is to be insisted on between eis to onoma and en tôi onomati with baptizô since eis and en are really the same word in origin. In Acts 10:48 en tōi onomati Iêsou Christou occurs, but eis to onoma in Acts 8:16; Acts 19:5. The use of onoma means in the name or with the authority of one as eis onoma prophêtou (Mat 10:41) as a prophet, in the name of a prophet. In the Acts the full name of the Trinity does not occur in baptism as in Mat 28:19, but this does not show that it was not used. The name of Jesus Christ is the distinctive one in Christian baptism and really involves the Father and the Spirit. See on Mat 28:19 for discussion of this point. "Luke does not give the form of words used in baptism by the Apostles, but merely states the fact that they baptized those who acknowledged Jesus as Messiah or as Lord" (Page). Unto the remission of your sins (eis aphesin tôn hamartiôn hûmôn). This phrase is the subject of endless controversy as men look at it from the standpoint of sacramental or of evangelical theology. In themselves the words can express aim or purpose for that use of eis does exist as in 1Co 2:7 eis doxan hêmôn (for our glory). But then another usage exists which is just as good Greek as the use of eis for aim or purpose. It is seen in Mat 10:41 in three examples eis onoma prophêtou, dikaiou, mathêtou where it cannot be purpose or aim, but rather the basis or ground, on the basis of the name of prophet, righteous man, disciple, because one is, etc. It is seen again in Mat 12:41 about the preaching of Jonah (eis to kêrugma Iôna). They repented because of (or at) the preaching of Jonah. The illustrations of both usages are numerous in the N.T. and the Koin, generally (Robertson, Grammar, p. 592). One will decide the use here according as he believes that baptism is essential to the remission of sins or not. My view is decidedly against the idea that Peter, Paul, or any one in the New Testament taught baptism as essential to the remission of sins or the means of securing such remission. So I understand Peter to be urging baptism on each of them who had already turned (repented) and for it to be done in the name of Jesus Christ on the basis of the forgiveness of sins which they had already received. The gift of the Holy Ghost (tên dôrean tou hagiou pneumatou). The gift consists (Acts 8:17) in the Holy Spirit (genitive of identification).

Verse 39

The promise (hê epaggelia). The promise made by Jesus (Acts 1:4) and foretold by Joel (verse Acts 2:18). To you (humin). You Jews. To your descendants, sons and daughters of verse Acts 2:17. To all that are afar off (pâsin tois eis makran). The horizon widens and includes the Gentiles. Those "afar off" from the Jews were the heathen (Isa 49:1; Isa 57:19; Eph 2:13, 17). The rabbis so used it. Shall call (an proskalesêtai). First aorist middle subjunctive with an in an indefinite relative clause, a perfectly regular construction. The Lord God calls men of every nation anywhere whether Jews or Gentiles. It may be doubted how clearly Peter grasped the significance of these words for he will have trouble over this very matter on the housetop in Joppa and in Caesarea, but he will see before long the full sweep of the great truth that he here proclaims under the impulse of the Holy Spirit. It was a great moment that Peter here reaches.

Verse 40

With many other words (heterois logos pleiosin). Instrumental case. Not necessarily "different" (heterois), but "further," showing that Luke does not pretend to give all that Peter said. This idea is also brought out clearly by pleiosin ("more," not "many"), more than these given by Luke. He testified (diemarturato). First aorist middle of diamarturomai, old verb, to make solemn attestation or call to witness (perfective use of dia), while martureô is to bear witness. Page insists that here it should be translated "protested solemnly" to the Jews as it seems to mean in Luke 16:28; Acts 20:23; 1Ti 5:21; 2Ti 2:14; 2Ti 4:1. And exhorted (kai parekalei). Imperfect active, kept on exhorting. Save yourselves (sôthête). First aorist passive of sôzô. Literally, Be ye saved. Crooked (skolias). Old word, opposite of orthos, straight. Pravus the opposite of rectus, a perversity for turning off from the truth. Cf. Luke 9:41; Php 2:15.

Verse 41

They then (Hoi men oun). A common phrase in Acts either without antithesis as in Acts 1:6; Acts 5:41; Acts 8:4, 25; Acts 9:31; Acts 11:19; Acts 16:5 or with it as here, Acts 8:25; Acts 13:4; Acts 14:3; Acts 17:17; Acts 23:31; Acts 25:4. Oun connects with what precedes as the result of Peter's sermon while men points forward to what is to follow. Were baptized (ebaptisthēsan). First aorist passive indicative, constative aorist. Note that only those who had already received the word and were converted were baptized. There were added (prosethēsan). First aorist passive indicative of prostithēmi, old verb to add, to join to. Luke means that the 3,000 were added to the 120 already enlisted. It is not stated they were all baptized by Peter or the twelve or all on the same day, though that is the natural implication of the language. The numerous pools in Jerusalem afforded ample opportunity for such wholesale baptizing and Hackett notes that the habit of orientals would place no obstacle in the way of the use of the public reservoirs. Furneaux warns us that all the 3,000 may not have been genuine converts and that many of them were pilgrims at the passover who returned home. Souls (psuchai). Persons as in verse Acts 2:43.

Verse 42

They continued steadfastly (ēsan proskarturountes). Periphrastic active imperfect of proskartureō as in Acts 1:14 (same participle in verse Acts 2:46). Fellowship (koinōniāi). Old word from koinōnos (partner, sharer in common interest) and this from koinos what is common to all. This partnership involves participation in, as the blood of Christ (Php 2:1) or co-operation in the work of the gospel (Php 1:5) or contribution for those in need (2Co 8:4; 2Co 9:13). Hence there is wide diversity of opinion concerning the precise meaning of koinōnia in this verse. It may refer to the distribution of funds in verse Acts 2:44 or to the oneness of spirit in the community of believers or to the Lord's Supper (as in 1Co 10:16) in the sense of communion or to the fellowship in the common meals or agapae (love-feasts). The breaking of bread (tēi klasei tou artou). The word klasis is an old word, but used only by Luke in the N.T. (Luke 24:35; Acts 2:42), though the verb klaō occurs in other parts of the N.T. as in verse Acts 2:46. The problem here is whether Luke refers to the ordinary meal as in Luke 24:35 or to the Lord's Supper. The same verb klaō is used of breaking bread at the ordinary meal (Luke 24:30) or the Lord's Supper (Luke 22:19). It is generally supposed that the early disciples attached so much significance to the breaking of bread at the ordinary meals, more than our saying grace, that they followed the meal with the Lord's Supper at first, a combination called agapai or love-feasts. "There can be no doubt that the Eucharist at this period was preceded uniformly by a common repast, as was the case when the ordinance was instituted" (Hackett). This led to some abuses as in 1Co 11:20. Hence it is possible that what is referred to here is the Lord's Supper following the ordinary meal. "To simply explain têi klasei tou artou as='the Holy Communion' is to pervert the plain meaning of words, and to mar the picture of family life, which the text places before us as the ideal of the early believers" (Page). But in Acts 20:7 they seem to have come together especially for the observance of the Lord's Supper. Perhaps there is no way to settle the point conclusively here. The prayers (tais proseuchais). Services where they prayed as in Acts 1:14, in the temple (Acts 3:1), in their homes (Acts 4:23).

Verse 43

Came (egineto). Imperfect middle, kept on coming. Were done (egineto). Same tense. Awe kept on coming on all and signs and wonders kept on coming through the apostles. The two things went on pari passu, the more wonders the more fear.

Verse 44

Were together (êsan epi to auto). Some MSS. êsan kai (were and). But they were together in the same place as in Acts 2:1. And had (kai eichon). Imperfect active, kept on having, a habit in the present emergency. Common (koina). It was not actual communism, but they held all their property ready for use for the common good as it was needed (Acts 4:32). This situation appears nowhere else except in Jerusalem and was evidently due to special conditions there which did not survive permanently. Later Paul will take a special collection for the poor saints in Jerusalem.

Verse 45

Sold (epipraskon). Imperfect active, a habit or custom from time to time. Old and common verb, pipraskô. Parted (diemerizon). Imperfect again of diamerizô, old verb for dividing or distributing between (dia) people. According as any man had need (kathoti an tis chreian eichen). Regular Greek idiom for comparative clause with an and imperfect indicative corresponding precisely with the three preceding imperfects (Robertson, Grammar, p. 967).

Verse 46

With one accord in the temple (homothumadon en tôi hierôi). See on Acts 1:14 for homothumadon. They were still worshipping in the temple for no breach had yet come between Christians and Jews. Daily they were here and daily breaking bread at home (kat' oikon) which looks like the regular meal. They did take their food (metelambanon trophês). Imperfect tense again and clearly referring to the regular meals at home. Does it refer also to the possible agapai or to the Lord's Supper afterwards as they had common meals "from house to house" (kat' oikon)? We know there were local churches in the homes where they had "worship rooms," the church in the house. At any rate it was "with singleness" (aphelotêti) of heart. The word occurs only here in the N.T., though a late Koin, word (papyri). It comes from aphelês, free from rock (phelleus is stony ground), smooth. The old form was apheleia.

Verse 47

Having favor (echontes charin). Cf. Luke 2:52 of the Boy Jesus. Added (prosetitheî). Imperfect active, kept on adding. If the Lord only always "added" those who join our churches. Note verse Acts 2:41 where same verb is used of the 3,000. To them (epi to auto). Literally, "together." Why not leave it so? "To the church" (têi ekklêsiâi) is not genuine. Codex Bezae has "in the church." Those that were being saved (tous sôzomenous). Present passive participle. Probably for repetition like the imperfect prosetitheî. Better translate it "those saved from time to time." It was a continuous revival, day by day. Sôzô like sôtêria is used for "save" in three senses (beginning, process, conclusion), but here repetition is clearly the point of the present tense.

Verse 1

Were going up (anebainon). Descriptive imperfect active. They were ascending the terraces to the temple courts. The ninth (tên enatên). Our three o'clock in the afternoon, the time of the evening sacrifice. Peter and John like Paul later kept up the Jewish worship, but not as a means of sacramental redemption. There were three hours of prayer (third, sixth, ninth).

Verse 2

Was carried (ebastazeto). Imperfect passive, picturing the process as in verse Acts 3:1. Laid daily (etithoun kath' hêmeran). Imperfect again describing their custom with this man. Beautiful (Hôraian). This gate is not so called elsewhere. It may have been the Gate of Nicanor on the east side looking towards Kidron described by Josephus (Ant. XV. 11, 3; War V. 5, 3) as composed chiefly of Corinthian brass and very magnificent.

Verse 3

Asked (êrôtâ). Began to ask, inchoative imperfect. It was his chance.

Verse 4

Fastening his eyes (atenisas). First aorist (ingressive) active participle of atenizô. For this verb see on Luke 4:20; Acts 1:10. Peter fixed his eyes on the beggar and invited him to look (blepson) on them.

Verse 5

Gave heed unto them (epeichen autois). Imperfect active of epechô, to hold to. For the idiom with ton noun understood see Acts 7:14; 1Ti 4:16. He held his eyes right on Peter and John with great eagerness "expecting to receive something" (prosdokôn ti labein). He took Peter's invitation as a promise of a large gift.

Verse 6

In the name (en tōi onomati). The healing power is in that name (Page) and Peter says so. Cf. Luke 9:49; Luke 10:17; Acts 4:7, 10; Acts 19:27; Acts 16:18. Walk (peripatei). Present imperative, inchoative idea, begin to walk and then go on walking. But the beggar does not budge. He knows that he cannot walk.

Verse 7

Took him by the right hand (piasas auton tēs dexiās cheiros). Doric form piazō for piezō. Genitive of the part affected. Peter had to pull him up on his feet before he would try to walk.

Verse 8

Leaping up (exallomenos). Present middle participle, leaping out repeatedly after Peter pulled him up. Only here in the N.T. He stood (estē). Second aorist active. Walked (periepatei). Went on walking, imperfect active. He came into the temple repeating these new exercises (walking, leaping, praising God).

Verse 10

They took knowledge of him (epeginōskon). Imperfect active, inchoative, began to perceive. Were filled (eplēsthēsan). Effective first aorist passive. At that which had happened (tōi sumbebēkoti). Perfect active participle of sumbainō.

Verse 11

The Codex Bezae adds "as Peter and John went out." As he held (kratountos autou). Genitive absolute of krateō, to hold fast, with accusative rather than genitive to get hold of (Acts 27:13). Old and common verb from kratos (strength, force). Perhaps out of gratitude and partly from fear (Luke 8:38). In the porch that is called Solomon's (epi tēi stoai tēi kaloumenēi Solomōntos). The adjective Stoic (stoikos) is from this word stoa (porch). It was on the east side of the court of the Gentiles (Josephus, Ant. XX. 9, 7) and was so called because it was built on a remnant of the foundations of the ancient temple. Jesus had once taught here (John 10:23). Greatly wondering (ekthamboi). Wondering out of (ek) measure, already filled with wonder (thambous, verse Acts 3:10). Late adjective. Construction according to sense (plural, though laos singular) as in Acts 5:16; Acts 6:7; Acts 11:1, etc.

Verse 12

Answered (apekrinato). First aorist middle indicative. The people looked their amazement and Peter answered that. Ye men of Israel (Andres Israêleitai). Covenant name and so conciliatory, the stock of Israel (Php 3:5). At this man (epi toutôi). Probably so, though it could be "at this thing." Fasten you your eyes (atenizete). The very verb used about Peter in verse Acts 3:4. On us (hêmin). Dative case, emphatic proleptical position before ti atenizete. On us why do ye fasten your eyes? As though (hôs). Hôs with the participle gives the alleged reason, not always the true one. Power (dunamei). Instrumental case, causa effectiva. Godliness (eusebeîai). Causa meritoria. Had made (pepoiêkosin). Perfect active participle of poiô. To walk (tou peripatein). Articular infinitive in the genitive case of result, purpose easily shading off into result (ecbatic infinitive) as here as is true also of hina.

Verse 13

His servant Jesus (ton paida Iêsoun). This phrase occurs in Isa 42:1; Isa 52:13 about the Messiah except the name "Jesus" which Peter adds, the first part of the quotation is from Ex 3:6; 5:30. The LXX translated the Hebrew ebhedh by pais, the servant of Jehovah being a Messianic designation. But the phrase "servant of God" (pais theou) is applied also to Israel (Luke 1:54) and to David (Luke 1:69; Acts 4:25). Paul terms himself doulos theou (Tit 1:1). Pais is just child (boy or girl), and it was also used of a slave (Mat 8:6, 8, 13). But it is not here huios (son) that Peter uses, but pais. Luke quotes Peter as using it again in this Messianic sense in Acts 3:26; Acts 4:27, 30. Whom ye delivered up (hon humeis men paredôkate). Note emphatic use of humeis (ye). No de to correspond to men. First aorist active (k aorist) plural indicative of paradidômi (usual form paredote, second aorist). When he (ekeinou). Emphatic pronoun, that one, in contrast with "ye" (humeis), genitive absolute with krinantos, here the nearest word (Pilate), the latter.

Verse 14

But ye (humeis de). In contrast with Pilate (ekeinou). Murderer (andra phonea). A man a murderer. In contrast with "the Holy and Righteous One." To be granted (charisthênai). As a favour (charis). First aorist passive infinitive of charizomai; So also Acts 25:11; Acts 27:24.

Verse 15

But the Prince of life ye killed (ton de archêgon tês zôês apekteinate). "The magnificent antithesis" (Bengel) Peter here draws between their asking for a murderer and killing the Prince (or Author) of life. Peter pictures Jesus as the source of all life as is done in John 1:1-18; Col 1:14-20; Heb 1:2. Archêgos (archê, beginning, agô, to lead) is an adjective "furnishing the first cause or occasion" in Euripides, Plato. Thence substantive, the originator, the leader, the pioneer as of Jesus both Beginner and Finisher (Heb 12:2). See also Heb 2:10; Acts 5:31 where it is applied to Jesus as "Prince and Saviour." But God raised him from the dead in contrast to what they had done. Whereof we are witnesses (hou hêmeis martures esmen). Of which fact (the resurrection) or of whom as risen, hou having the same form in the genitive singular for masculine or neuter. Peter had boldly claimed that all the 120 have seen the Risen Christ. There is no denial of that claim.

Verse 16

By faith in his name (têi pistei tou onomatos autou). Instrumental case of pistei (Aleph and B do not have epi) and objective genitive of onomatos. His name (to onoma autou). Repeats the word name to make the point clear. Cf. verse Acts 3:6 where Peter uses "the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth" when he healed the man. Made strong (estereôsen). Same verb used in verse Acts 3:7 (and Acts 16:5). Nowhere else in the N.T. Old verb from stereos, firm, solid. Through him (di' autou). Through Jesus, the object of faith and the source of it. Perfect soundness (holoklêrian). Perfect in all its parts, complete, whole (from holos, whole, klêros, allotment). Late word (Plutarch) once in LXX (Isa 1:6) and here alone in the N.T., but adjective holoklêros, old and common (Jas 1:4; 1Th 5:23).

Verse 17

And now (kai nun). Luke is fond of these particles of transition (Acts 7:34; Acts 10:5; Acts 20:25; Acts 22:16) and also kai ta nun (Acts 4:29; Acts 5:38; Acts 20:22; Acts 27:22), and even kai nun idou (Acts 13:11; Acts 27:22). I wot (oida). Old English for "I know." In ignorance (kata agnoian). This use of kata occurs in the Koin,. See also Phm 1:14. One may see Luke 23:34 for the words of the Saviour on the Cross. "They had sinned, but their sin was not of so deep a dye that it could not have been still more heinous" (Hackett). If they had known what they were doing, they would not knowingly have crucified the Messiah (1Co 2:8).

Verse 18

Foreshewed (prokatêggeilen). First aorist active indicative of prokataggellô, late compound to announce fully beforehand. Only twice in the N.T. in the critical text (Acts 3:18; Acts 7:52). That his Christ should suffer (pathein ton Christon autou). Accusative of general reference with the aorist active infinitive (pathein of paschô) in indirect discourse (predictive purpose of God). Their crime, though real, was carrying out God's purpose (Acts 2:23; John 3:16). See the same idea in Acts 17:3; Acts 26:23. This "immense paradox" (Page) was a stumbling block to these Jews as it is yet (1Co 1:23). Peter discusses the sufferings of Christ in 1Pe 4:13; 1Pe 5:1.

Verse 19

Repent therefore (metanoêsate oun). Peter repeats to this new crowd the command made in Acts 2:38 which see. God's purpose and patience call for instant change of attitude on their part. Their guilt does not shut them out if they will turn. And turn again (kai epistrepsate). Definitely turn to God in conduct as well as in mind. That your sins may be blotted out (pros to exaliphthênai humôn tas hamartias). Articular infinitive (first aorist passive of exaleiphô, to wipe out, rub off, erase, smear out, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Col 2:14) with the accusative of general reference and with pros and the accusative to express purpose. That so (hopôs an). Final particle with an and the aorist active subjunctive elthôsin (come) and not "when" as the Authorized Version has it. Some editors put this clause in verse Acts 3:20 (Westcott and Hort, for instance). Seasons of refreshing (kairoi anapsuxeôs). The word anapsuxis (from anapsuchô, to cool again or refresh, 2Ti 1:16) is a late word (LXX) and occurs here alone in the N.T. Surely repentance will bring "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Verse 20

And that he may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus (kai aposteilêi ton prokecheirismenon humin Christon Iêsoun). First aorist active subjunctive with hopôs an as in Acts 15:17 and Luke 2:35. There is little real difference in idea between hopôs an and hina an. There is a conditional element in all purpose clauses. The reference is naturally to the second coming of Christ as verse Acts 3:21 shows. Knowling admits "that there is a spiritual presence of the enthroned Jesus which believers enjoy as a foretaste of the visible and glorious Presence of the Parousia." Jesus did promise to be with the disciples all the days (Mat 28:20), and certainly repentance with accompanying seasons of refreshing help get the world ready for the coming of the King. The word prokecheirismenon (perfect passive participle of procheirizô, from procheiros, at hand, to take into one's hands, to choose) is the correct text here, not prokekêrugmenon. In the N.T. only here and Acts 22:14; Acts 26:16. It is not "Jesus Christ" here nor "Christ Jesus," but "the Messiah, Jesus," identifying Jesus with the Messiah. See the Second Epiphany of Jesus foretold also in 1Ti 6:15 and the First Epiphany described in 1Pe 1:20.

Verse 21

Restoration (apokatastaseôs). Double compound (apo, kata, histêmi), here only in the N.T., though common in late writers. In papyri and inscriptions for repairs to temples and this phrase occurs in Jewish apocalyptic writings, something like the new heaven and the new earth of Rev 21:1. Paul has a mystical allusion also to the agony of nature in Rom 8:20-22. The verb apokathistêmi is used by Jesus of the spiritual and moral restoration wrought by the Baptist as Elijah (Mat 17:11; Mark 9:12) and by the disciples to Jesus in Acts 1:6. Josephus uses the word of the return from captivity and Philo of the restitution of inheritances in the year of jubilee. As a technical medical term it means complete restoration to health. See a like idea in palingenesia (renewal, new birth) in Mat 19:28; Tit 3:5. This universalism of Peter will be clearer to him after Joppa and Caesarea.

Verse 22

Like unto me (hôs eme). As me, literally; Moses (Deut 18:14-18) claims that God raised him up as a prophet and that another and greater one will come, the Messiah. The Jews understood Moses to be a type of Christ (John 1:21). God spoke to Moses face to face (Ex 33:11) and he was the greatest of the prophets (Deut 34:10).

Verse 23

That prophet (tou prophêtou ekeinou). Emphasizes the future prophet as on "him" (autou) before "hearken." They had refused to "hearken" to Moses and now, alas, many had refused to "hearken" to Christ. Shall be utterly destroyed (exolethreuthêsetai). First future passive of exole- (o) threuô, a late verb, to destroy utterly (ex), only here in the N.T., common in the LXX.

Verse 24

From Samuel (apo Samouêl). Schools of prophets arose in his time, few before him (1Sa 3:1).

Verse 25

Ye (Humeis). Emphatic position. The covenant which God made (tês diathêkês hês ho theos dietheto). Literally, "the covenant which God covenanted." Diathêkê and dietheto (second aorist middle indicative of diathêmi) are the same root. See on Mat 26:28. The covenant (agreement between two, dia, tithêmi) was with Abraham (Gen 12:1-3) and repeated at various times (Gen 18:18; Gen 22:18; Gen 26:4, etc.). In Heb 9:15-18 the word is used both for covenant and will. The genitive relative hês attracted to case of the antecedent.

Verse 26

Unto you first (Humin prôton). The Jews were first in privilege and it was through the Jews that the Messiah was to come for "all the families of the earth." His servant (ton paida autou). As in verse Acts 3:13, the Messiah as God's Servant. To bless you (eulougounta humas). Present active participle to express purpose, blessing you (Robertson, Grammar, p. 991). In turning away (en tôi apostrephein). Articular infinitive in the locative case, almost preserved in the English.

Verse 1

The captain of the temple (ho stratêgos tou hierou). Twenty-four bands of Levites guarded the temple, one guard at a time. They watched the gates. The commander of each band was called captain (stratêgos). Josephus names this captain of the temple police next to the high priest (War. VI. 5, 3). The Sadducees (hoi Saddoukaioi). Most of the priests were Sadducees now and all the chief priests since John Hyrcanus I deserted the Pharisees (Josephus, Ant. XVII. 10, 6; XVIII. 1, 4; XX. 9, 1). The Sadducees were slow to line up with the Pharisees against Jesus, but they now take the lead against Peter and John. Came upon them (epestêsan autois). Second aorist active indicative (intransitive). Burst upon them suddenly or stood by them in a hostile attitude here (Luke 20:1; Luke 24:4; Acts 6:12; Acts 17:5; Acts 22:20; Acts 23:11).

Verse 2

Being sore troubled (diaponoumenoi). Present passive participle of old verb diaponeô (perfective use of dia) to be worked up, indignant. In the N.T. only here and Acts 16:8. Because (dia to). The articular infinitive with two accusatives, one the object (the people), the other ("they") of general reference. In Jesus (en Iêsou). In the case of Jesus, an actual instance of resurrection which the Sadducees denied (Mat 22:23). This same use of en appears in 1Co 4:6 (in us). The Sadducees were also aristocrats and political ecclesiastics who disliked popular disturbances. In particular, they resented the claim about Jesus whom they had helped crucify.

Verse 3

In ward (eis tērêsin). Probably in one of the chambers of the temple. In safe keeping (from têreô, to guard). Old word, in the N.T. only here and Acts 5:18; 1Co 7:19. So in papyri. Now eventide (hespera êdê). Hence no trial could take place before the next day, a regulation violated in the case of Jesus.

Verse 4

Men (andrôn). Strictly, men and not women, for anthrôpos is the term for both men and women. But in Luke 11:31 andres seems to include both men and women and that is possible here, though by no means certain, for see Mat 14:21 where the women and children are expressly excepted.

Verse 5

Rulers and elders and scribes (tous archontas kai tous presbuterous kai tous grammateis). The three classes composing the Sanhedrin (rulers=chief priests who were Sadducees, the scribes usually Pharisees, the elders not in either class: 24 priests, 24 elders, 22 scribes). Were gathered together (sunachthênai). First aorist passive infinitive of sunagô with accusative of general reference and the subject of egeneto.

Verse 6

Annas (Hannas). One of the rulers or chief priests, ex-high priest (A.D. 7-14) and father-in-law of Caiaphas (Kaiaphas) who was actual high priest at that time, though the title clung to Annas as here (both so called in Luke 3:2), Caiaphas so by Roman law, Annas so in the opinion of the Jews. They with John and Alexander are the leaders among the Sadducees in pressing the case against Peter and John.

Verse 7

In the midst (en tōi mesōi). The Sanhedrin sat in a semicircle. They inquired (epunthanonto). Imperfect middle, began to inquire. Or in what name (ê en poiōi onomati). As if by some magical formula such as exorcists practised (Acts 19:13) as if to catch them by (Deut 13:1). Have ye done this (epoiēsate touto humeis). Note emphatic use of humeis (ye).

Verse 8

Filled with the Holy Spirit (plēstheis pneumatos hagiou). For this occasion and so above all fear as in verse Acts 4:31 and as in Acts 2:4.

Verse 9

Concerning a good deed done to an impotent man (epi euergesiâi anthrôpou asthenous). Objective genitive. Note euergesia (old word, in the N.T. only here and 1Ti 6:2), as a benefactor, not a malefactor. Skilful turn made by Peter. Is made whole (sesôstai). Perfect passive indicative of sôzô, stands whole.

Verse 10

Be it known (gnôston estô). Imperative present active third singular of eimi, to be, and the verbal adjective gnôston. Whom ye crucified (hon humeis estaurôsate). Too good a chance to miss, and so Peter boldly charges the Sanhedrin with responsibility for the death of Jesus. Note humeis (ye) again. Whom God raised from the dead (hon ho theos êgeiren ek nekrôn). Note repetition of hon (whom). This is God's answer to their act of crucifixion. In him doth this man stand (en toutōi houtos parestêken). Rather (note play on houtos), "In this one (hon, hon) this one stands (present perfect active indicative, intransitive)." In Jesus this man stands before you whole (hugiês). It was a centre shot.

Verse 11

Of you the builders (huph' humôn tôn oikodomôn). The experts, the architects, had rejected Jesus for their building (Ps 118:22) as Jesus himself had pointed out (Mat 21:42; Luke 21:17). This very Rejected Stone God had made the head of the corner (either the highest corner stone right under the roof or the corner stone under the building, Isa 28:16) as Jesus showed, as Peter here declares and repeats later (1Pe 2:6).

Verse 12

Salvation (hê sôtêria). The Messianic salvation as in Acts 5:31; Acts 17:11 and as Jesus meant in John 4:22. It is amazing to see Peter speaking thus to the Sanhedrin and proclaiming the necessity of salvation (dei sôthênai) in the name of Jesus Christ and in no other. If this was true then, it is true today. There is no second (heteron) name to go beside that of Jesus in India, China, Japan, or America.

Verse 13

The boldness (tên parrêsian). Telling it all (pan, rêsia). See also verses Acts 4:29, 31. Actually Peter had turned the table on the Sanhedrin and had arraigned them before the bar of God. Had perceived (katalabomenoi). Second aorist middle participle of katalambanô, common verb to grasp strongly (kata), literally or with the mind (especially middle voice), to comprehend. The rulers recalled Peter and John from having seen them often with Jesus, probably during the temple teaching, etc. They were unlearned (agrammatoi eisin). Present indicative retained in indirect discourse. Unlettered men without technical training in the professional rabbinical schools of Hillel or Shammai. Jesus himself was so regarded (John 7:15, "not having learned letters"). And ignorant (kai idiôtai). Old word, only here in the N.T. and 1Co 14:24; 2Co 11:6. It does not mean "ignorant," but a layman, a man not in office (a private person), a common soldier and not an officer, a man not skilled in the schools, very much like agrammatos. It is from idios (one's own) and our "idiosyncrasy" is one with an excess of such a trait, while "idiot" (this very word) is one who has nothing but his idiosyncrasy. Peter and John were men of ability and of courage, but they did not belong to the set of the rabbis. They marvelled (ethaumazon). Imperfect (inchoative) active, began to wonder and kept it up. Took knowledge of them (epeginôskon autous). Imperfect (inchoative) active again, they began to recognize them as men that they had seen with Jesus.

Verse 14

They could say nothing against it (ouden eichon anteipein). Imperfect again, they kept on having nothing to say against it. The lame man was standing there before their eyes in proof of what Peter had said.

Verse 15

They conferred among themselves (suneballon pros allêlous). Imperfect active again. With Peter and John and the lame man outside, they began to compare (sun, ballô) notes and take stock of their predicament.

Verse 16

What shall we do? (Ti poiêsômen). Deliberative aorist active subjunctive (ingressive and urgent aorist). Notable miracle (gnôston sêmeion). Or sign. It was useless to deny it with the man there. We cannot deny it (ou dunametha arneisthai). That is, it will do no good.

Verse 17

That it spread no further (hina mê epi pleion dianemêthêi). First aorist passive subjunctive of dianemô, to distribute with hina mê, negative purpose. Let us threaten them (apeilêsômetha autois). Hortatory aorist middle subjunctive of apeileô, old verb (note middle voice). In the N.T. only here and 1Pe 2:23. That they speak henceforth to no man in this name (mêketi lalein epi tôi onomati toutôi mêdeni anthrôpôn). Indirect command with the infinitive and double negative (mêketi, mêdeni). They will not say "Jesus," but make a slur at "this name," contemptuous use of houtos, though they apparently do mention the name "Jesus" in verse Acts 4:18.

Verse 18

Not to speak at all (katholou mê phtheggesthai). Same construction as above, infinitive in indirect command with negative mê (and mêde).

Verse 20

For we cannot but speak (ou dunametha gar hêmeis--mê lalein). Both negatives hold here, "For we (note emphatic hêmeis) are not able not to speak" (what we saw and heard). This is defiance of the civil and ecclesiastical authorities that was justified, for the temple authorities stepped in between the conscience and God. Peter and John were willing to pay the price of this defiance with their lives. This is the courage of martyrs through all the ages.

Verse 21

When they had further threatened them (prosapeilêsamenoi). The "further" is in "pros" (in addition), Finding nothing how they might punish them (mêden heuriskontes to pôs kolasôntai autous). Note the article "to" before pôs (how), "the how." Aorist middle deliberative subjunctive kolasôntai in indirect question after pôs from kolazô, to lop (kolos, lopped), to curb, to prune, to correct, to punish. Old verb, in the N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:9. Glorified God (edoxazon ton theon). Imperfect active, kept on glorifying God while the Sanhedrin were threatening Peter and John. It was to laugh at the helplessness of the Sanhedrin.

Was wrought (gegonei). Second past perfect active without augment from ginomai.

Verse 23

To their own company (pros tous idious). Their own people as in John 1:11; John 13:1; Acts 24:23; 1Ti 5:8; Tit 3:14, not merely the apostles (all the disciples). In spite of Peter's courageous defiance he and John told the brotherhood all that had been said by the Sanhedrin. They had real apprehension of the outcome.

Verse 24

With one accord (homothumadon). A concert of voices as already seen by the word in Acts 1:14; Acts 2:46 and later in Acts 5:12; Acts 7:57; Acts 15:25. O Lord (Despota). Our word despot. Old word for relation of master to slaves or household servants (1Ti 6:1; 2Ti 2:21; Tit 2:9; 1Pe 2:18). Simeon thus addressed God (Luke 2:29). So in 2Pe 2:1; Jude 1:4; Acts 6:10. See "slaves" in verse Acts 4:29.

Verse 25

By the mouth of our father David (tou patros hêmôn dia pneumatos hagiou stomatos Daueid). From Ps 2:1. here ascribed to David. Baumgarten suggests that the whole company sang the second Psalm and then Peter applied it to this emergency. The Greek MSS. do not have dia (by) here before stomatos, but only dia before pneumatos hagiou (the Holy Spirit). Hort calls this a "primitive error" perhaps due to an early scribe who omitted this second dia so close to the first dia (Robertson, Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the N.T., p. 238). A small list of such primitive errors is there given as suggested by Dr. Hort. Why (hina ti). This Greek idiom calls for genêtai (second aorist middle subjunctive), That what may happen. The Gentiles (ethnê). So always in LXX, while laoi (peoples) can include Jews. Did rage (ephruaxan). First aorist active indicative of phruassô, late word, to neigh like a horse, to prance or stamp the ground, to put on lofty airs. Only here in the N.T. in this quotation from Ps 2:1. Imagine (emeletêsan). First aorist active indicative of meletaô. Old verb from meletê (care), to practise, to caution, as orators and rhetoricians. Only here in the N.T. in this quotation.

Verse 26

Set themselves in array (parestêsan). Literally, stood by. Against his Anointed (kata tou Christou autou). Against his Messiah, his Christ.

Verse 27

Both Herod and Pontius Pilate (Hêrôidês te kai Pontius Peilatos). Luke alone (Luke 23:12) tells of the reconciliation between Herod and Pilate at the trial of Jesus. So Peter and the rest interpret this prophecy as directly fulfilled in their conduct towards Jesus Christ. Whom thou didst anoint (hon echrisas). As in verse Acts 4:26 (cf. Luke 4:18; Isa 61:1). Inaugurated as King Messiah.

Verse 28

Foreordained (proôrisen). First aorist active indicative of proorizô, "They rise above sight and seem to see the Hand which 'shapes men's ends, rough hew them how they will'" (Furneaux).

Verse 29

And now (kai ta nun). "And as to (accusative of general reference) the now things (the present situation)." Only in the Acts in the N.T. (Acts 5:38; Acts 17:30; Acts 20:32; Acts 27:22). Grant (dos). Second aorist active imperative of didômi, urgency of the aorist, Do it now. To speak thy word with all boldness (meta parrêsias pasês lalein ton logon sou). Literally, "with all boldness to go on speaking (present active infinitive) thy word." Peter and John had defied the Sanhedrin in verse Acts 4:20, but all the same and all the more they pray for courage in deed to live up to their brave words. A wholesome lesson.

Verse 30

While thou stretchest forth thy hand (en tôi tèn cheira ekteinein se). Luke's favourite idiom, "In the stretching out (articular present active infinitive) the hand as to thee" (accusative of general reference), the second allusion to God's "hand" in this prayer (verse Acts 4:28). To heal (eis iasin). For healing. See verse Acts 4:22. And that signs and wonders may be done (kai sêmeia kai terata ginesthai). Either to be taken as in the same construction as ekteinein with en tôi as Revised Version has it here or to be treated as subordinate purpose to en tôi ekteinein (as Knowling, Page, Wendt, Hackett). The latter most likely true. They ask for a visible sign or proof that God has heard this prayer for courage to be faithful even unto death.

Verse 31

The place was shaken (esaleuthê ho topos). By an earthquake most likely as in Acts 16:26, but none the less a token of God's presence and power (Ps 114:7; Isa 2:19, 21; Heb 12:26). Were gathered together (êsan sunêgmenoi). Periphrastic past perfect passive of sunagô. They spake (elaloun). Imperfect active indicative, began to speak, after being filled (eplêsêsan, aorist passive indicative) with the Holy Spirit. Luke uses the very words of the prayer in verse Acts 4:29 to describe their conduct.

Verse 32

Of one heart and soul (kardia kai psuchê mia). It is not possible to make sharp distinction between heart and soul here (see Mark 12:30), only that there was harmony in thought and affection. But the English translation is curiously unlike the Greek original. "There was one heart and soul (nominative case, not genitive as the English has it) in the multitude (tou plêthous, subjective genitive) of those who believed." Not one of them (oude heis). More emphatic than oudeis, "not even one." Common (koina). In the use of their property, not in the possession as Luke proceeds to explain. The word koinos is kin to sun (together with)=xun (Epic) and so xunos=koinos. See this word already in Acts 2:44. The idea of unclean (Acts 10:15) is a later development from the original notion of common to all.

Verse 33

Gave their witness (apedidoun to marturion). Imperfect active of apodidômi, old verb to give back, to pay back a debt (Luke 7:42), but a late omega form instead of the usual apedidosan. They kept on giving their witness with power after the answer to their prayer (verse Acts 4:31). Of the resurrection (tês anastaseôs). It was on this issue that the Sadducees had arrested them (Acts 4:1-3).

Verse 34

That lacked (endeês). Literally, in need, old adjective, here only in the N.T. Were (hupêrchon). Imperfect active of huparchô, to exist. Sold them and brought (pôlountes epheron). Present active participle and imperfect active indicative. Selling they brought from time to time, as there was occasion by reason of need. Hence the wants were kept supplied. Laid them (etithoun). Imperfect active again, repetition, of tithêmi, late omega form for the usual etithesan.

Verse 35

Distribution was made (diedideto). Imperfect passive of diadidômi, late omega form for diedidoto (the stem vowel o displaced by e). Impersonal use of the verb here. According as any one had need (kathoti an tis chreian eichen). Imperfect active of echô with kathoti and an with the notion of customary repetition in a comparative clause (Robertson, Grammar, p. 967).

Verse 36

Barnabas (Barnabas). His name was Joseph (correct text, and not Jesus) and he is mentioned as one illustration of those in verse Acts 4:34 who selling brought the money. The apostles gave him the nickname Barnabas by which later he was known because of this noble deed. This fact argues that all did not actually sell, but were ready to do so if needed. Possibly Joseph had a larger estate than some others also. The meaning of the nickname is given by Luke as "son of consolation or exhortation" (huios paraklêseôs). Doubtless his gifts as a preacher lay along this same line. Rackham thinks that the apostles gave him this name when he was recognized as a prophet. In Acts 11:23 the very word parekalei (exhorted) is used of Barnabas up at Antioch. He is the type of preacher described by Paul in 1Co 14:3. Encouragement is the chief idea in paraklêsis though exhortation, comfort, consolation are used to render it (Acts 9:31; Acts 13:15; Acts 15:31). See also Acts 16:9; Acts 20:12. It is not necessary to think that the apostles coined the name Barnabas for Joseph which originally may have come from Barnebous (Deissmann, Bible Studies, pp. 308-10), son of Nebo, or even the Hebrew Bar Nebi (son of a prophet). But, whatever the origin, the popular use is given by Luke. He was even called apostle along with Paul (Acts 14:14) in the broad sense of that word.

Verse 37

Having a held (huparchontos autôi agrou). Genitive absolute with present active participle of huparchô and dative of possession. Sold it and brought (pôlêsas ênegken). Aorist active participle of pôleô and second aorist active indicative of pherô because a single definite instance. So also with ethêken (laid), first aorist active.

Sold (epôlêsên). Aorist active indicative again, for a single case.

Verse 2

Kept back (enosphisato). First aorist middle indicative of nosphizô, old verb from nosphi, afar, apart, and so to set apart, to separate for oneself, but only here, verse Acts 5:3; Tit 2:10 in the N.T. His wife also being privy to it (suneiduiês kai tês gunaikos). Genitive absolute with second perfect participle of sunoida, to know together with one, "his wife also knowing it together with him." Brought a certain part (enegkas meros ti). Aorist active participle of pherô, for a definite act. The praise of Joseph was too much for Ananias, but he was not willing to turn over all. He wanted praise for giving all and yet he took care of himself by keeping some. Thus he started the Ananias Club that gave a new meaning to his lovely name (God is gracious).

Filled (eplêrôsen). The very verb used of the filling by the Holy Spirit (Acts 4:31). Satan the adversary is the father of lies (John 8:44). He had entered into Judas (Luke 22:3; John 13:27) and now he has filled the heart of Ananias with a lie. To lie to the Holy Spirit (pseusasthai se to pneuma to hagion). Infinitive (aorist middle) of purpose with accusative of general reference (se) and the accusative of the person (object) as often in Greek writers, though here only in the N.T. with this verb. Usual dative of the person in verse Acts 5:4 (anthrôpois, men, tôi theôi, God). The Holy Spirit had been given them to guide them into truth (John 15:13).

Verse 4

Whiles it remained (menon). Present active participle of menô, unsold, Peter means. After it was sold (prathên). First aorist passive of pipraskô, to sell. How is that thou hast conceived (Ti hoti ethou). Quid est quod. See Luke 2:49. See also Acts 5:9. Second aorist middle indicative second person singular of tithêmi. The devil filled his heart (verse Acts 5:3), but all the same Ananias did it too and is wholly responsible.

Verse 5

Hearing (akouôn). Present active participle of akouô, while hearing. Fell down (pesôn). Second aorist active participle of piptô, fell all of a sudden while listening. Gave up the ghost (exepsuxen). First aorist active indicative of ekpsuchô, late verb in LXX and Hippocrates, to breathe out, to expire. In the N.T. only here, verse Acts 5:10; Acts 12:23. It is needless to blame Peter for the death of Ananias. He had brought the end upon himself. It was the judgment of God. Physically the nervous shock could have caused the collapse.

Verse 6

The young men (hoi neôteroi). Literally the younger men (contrast with hoi presbuteroi, the elder men). Same as neaniskoi in verse Acts 5:10 and so no order in the young church. Perhaps these young men were acting as ushers or actual pallbearers. Wrapped him round (sunesteilan). First aorist active indicative of sustellô, old verb, to draw together, or contract (1Co 7:29), to roll together, to wrap with bandages, to enshroud as here. Nowhere else in the N.T. Frequent in medical writers. They may have used their own mantles. The time for burial was short in Jerusalem for sanitary reasons and to avoid ceremonial defilement.

Verse 7

And it was about the space of three hours after (egeneto de hōs hōrôn triōn diastēma). Literally "Now there came an interval (diastēma, distance, space between) of about (hōs) three hours." When (kai). This use of kai after egeneto is characteristic of Luke's style in the Gospel. Not knowing (mê eiduia). Feminine singular of second perfect active participle of oida. Mê usual negative of the participle in the Koin,.

Verse 8

For so much (tosoutou). Genitive of price. Perhaps Peter pointed to the pile of money at the feet of the apostles (verse Acts 5:2). The use of ei in direct questions appears in Luke (Luke 13:23; Luke 22:49) as in the LXX like the Hebrew im and in Acts 1:6; Acts 19:2, etc.

Verse 9

Ye have agreed together (sunephônêthē humin). First aorist passive indicative of sumphōneō (to voice together, symphony), impersonal with dative; It was agreed together by you (or for you). "Your souls were allured together respecting this deceit" (Vincent). To tempt the Spirit of the Lord (peirasai to pneuma kuriou). Like "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." It was close to the unpardonable sin which was attributing the manifest work of the Holy Spirit to Beelzebub. The feet (hoi podēs). Graphic picture by Peter as he heard the steps of the young men at the door.

Verse 10

Immediately (parachrēma). Hence her death was regarded as supernatural like that of Ananias. By her husband (pros ton andra autēs). Face to face to her husband.

Verse 11

Upon the whole church (eph' holēn tēn ekklēsian). Here ekklēsia for the first time in Acts of the believers in Jerusalem. Twice already in the Gospels, once of the whole body of believers or the Kingdom (Mat 16:18), the other of the local body (Mat 18:17). In Acts 7:38 it is used of the whole congregation of Israel while in Acts 19:32 it is used of a public assembly in Ephesus. But already in Acts 8:3 it is applied to the church which Saul was persecuting in their homes when not assembled. So here the etymological meaning of "assembly" disappears for "the church" were now the scattered saints hiding in their separate homes. The whole body of believers in Jerusalem and all who heard of the fate of Ananias and Sapphira (beautiful, her name means) were in awe and dread. It was already a dangerous thing to be a follower of Christ unless one was willing to walk straight.

Verse 12

Were wrought (egineto). Imperfect middle, wrought from time to time. With one accord (homothumadon). As already in Acts 1:14; Acts 2:46; Acts 4:24 and later Acts 7:57; Acts 8:6; Acts 12:20; Acts 15:25; Acts 18:21; Acts 19:29, old adverb and only in Acts in the N.T. Here "all" is added. In Solomon's Porch again as in Acts 3:11 which see.

Verse 13

Durst (etolma). Imperfect active of tolmaō, old verb, not to fear or shun through fear, boldly to take a stand. The fate of Ananias and Sapphira continued to hold many in check. Join (kollasthai). Present middle infinitive of kollaō, old verb to cleave to like glue as in Luke 15:15 which see. Seven times in Acts (Acts 9:26; Acts 10:28; Acts 17:34). The outsiders (the rest) preferred, many of them, to remain outside for the present, especially the rulers. Howbeit the people (all'--ho laos). Probably individuals among the people, the populace as distinct from the rulers and hostile outsiders.

Verse 14

Were the more added (mállon prosetithento). Rather (mállon) instead of decrease as one might expect. Imperfect passive indicative of prostithēmi common mi verb, kept on being added. Both of men and women (andrôn te kai gunaikôn). The distinction between andres and gunaikes and to be considered in connection with andres in Acts 4:4 which see.

Verse 15

Insomuch that (hôte). With the present infinitive ekpherein and tithenai, regular Greek idiom for result. Into the streets (eis tas plateias). Supply hodous (ways), into the broad ways. On beds and couches (epi klinariôn kai krabattôn). Little beds (klinaria diminutive of klinê) and camp beds or pallets (see on Mark 2:4, 9, 11). As Peter came by (erchomenou Petrou). Genitive absolute with present middle participle. At the least his shadow might overshadow (kan hê skia episkiasei). Future active indicative with hina (common with hopôs in ancient Greek) and kan (crasis for kai ean=even if), even if only the shadow. The word for shadow (skia, like our "sky") is repeated in the verb and preserved in our "overshadow." There was, of course, no virtue or power in Peter's shadow. That was faith with superstition, of course, just as similar cases in the Gospels occur (Mat 9:20; Mark 6:56; John 9:5) and the use of Paul's handkerchief (Acts 19:12). God honours even superstitious faith if it is real faith in him. Few people are wholly devoid of superstition.

Verse 16

Came together (sunêrcheto). Imperfect middle, kept on coming. Round about (perix). Old adverb, strengthened form of peri, only here in the N.T. Vexed (ochloumenous). Present passive participle of ochleô, to excite a mob (ochlos) against one, to trouble, annoy. Old word, only here in the N.T., though enochleô in Luke 6:18. Were healed every one (etherapeuonto hapantes). Imperfect passive, were healed one at a time, repetition.

Verse 17

Which is the sect of the Sadducees (hê ousa haireisis tôn Saddoukaiôn). Literally, "the existing sect of the Sadducees" or "the sect which is of the Sadducees," hê being the article, not the relative. Hairesis means a choosing, from haireomai, to take for oneself, to choose, then an opinion chosen or tenet (possibly 2Pe 2:1), then parties or factions (Gal 5:20; 1Co 11:19; possibly 2Pe 2:1). It is applied here to the Sadducees; to the Pharisees in Acts 15:5; Acts 26:5; to the Christians in Acts 24:5-14; Acts 28:22. Already Luke has stated that the Sadducees started the persecution of Peter and John (Acts 4:1). Now it is extended to "the apostles" as a whole since Christianity has spread more rapidly in Jerusalem than before it began.

Verse 18

With jealousy (zêlou). Genitive case. Old word from ze", to boil, our zeal. In itself it means only warmth, ardour, zeal, but for a bad cause or from a bad motive, jealousy, envy, rivalry results (Acts 13:45). Common in the epistles. In public ward (en tērêsei dêmosiâi). As in Acts 4:3 only with dêmosiâi (public) added, in the public prison, perhaps not the "common" prison, but any prison is bad enough. In verse Acts 5:19 it is called "the prison" (tês phulakês), the guardhouse.

Verse 20

And stand (kai stathentes). First aorist passive participle (intransitive, ingressive aorist), take a stand. Bold and pictorial command. All the words of this life (panta ta rhêmata tês zôês tautês). Not just a Hebraism for "all these words of life." Probably "this life" which the Sadducees deny and of which the angel is now speaking, this eternal life. (John 6:63, 68; 1Co 15:19).

Verse 21

About daybreak (hupo ton orthron). From ornumi, to stir up, to arouse, so the dawn (Luke 24:1; John 8:2). Old word, but in the N.T. only these three passages. "Under the dawn" or "about dawn." Sub lucem. The temple doors would be open for early worshippers and traffickers (John 2:14). Taught (edidaskon). Imperfect active, began to teach. The council (to sunedrion). The Sanhedrin. The senate (tên gerousian). From gerôn, an old man, just as the Latin senatus is from senex, old. Like the gerontes in Homer and the Elder Statesmen in Japan. Apparently the senate of the people were also part of the Sanhedrin and the use of "and" (kai) is explanatory and adds this item in particular. Page thinks that this group of elders were not members of the Sanhedrin at all. To the prison house (eis to desmôtêrion), another word for prison (têrêsis dêmosia in verse Acts 5:18, hê phulakê in verse Acts 5:19). See also verses Acts 5:22, 23, 25. This from desmos, bond, and têreô, to keep, place where bound men are kept.

Verse 22

The officers (hoi hupêretai). Under-rowers, literally (Mat 5:25). The servants or officers who executed the orders of the Sanhedrin. Shut (kekleismenon). Perfect passive participle of kleiô. Shut tight. Standing at the doors (hestôtas epi tôn thurôn). Graphic picture of the sentinels at the prison doors.

Verse 24

They were much perplexed (diêporoun). Imperfect active of diaporeô old verb by Luke only in the N.T. See already on Acts 2:12. They continued puzzled. Whereunto this would grow (ti an genoito touto). More exactly, As to what this would become. Second aorist middle optative of ginomai with an, the conclusion of a condition of the fourth class (undetermined with less likelihood of determination), the unexpressed condition being "if the thing should be allowed to go on." The indirect question simply retains the optative with an (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1021, 1044). If they had only known how this grain of mustard seed would grow into the greatest tree on earth and how dwarfed the tree of Judaism would be beside it!

Verse 26

Brought (êgen). Imperfect active of agô, was bringing (leading), slowly no doubt, and solemnly. But without violence (ou meta bias). Literally, not with violence. For they feared (ephobounto gar). Imperfect middle, still feared, kept on fearing. Lest they be stoned (mê lithasthôsîn). Negative purpose with mê (like hina mê), probably with "not with violence," though possible with "they feared." They handled the apostles gently for fear of being stoned themselves by the people. First aorist passive subjunctive of lithazô (from lithos, stone), old verb to pelt with stones (Acts 14:19; John 10:31-33).

Verse 27

They set them (estêsan). First aorist active indicative (transitive) of histêmi.

Verse 28

We straitly charged (Paraggeliâi parêggeilamen). Like the Hebrew idiom (common in the LXX), though found in Greek, with charging (instrumental case) we charged (cf. same idiom in (Luke 22:15). Somewhat like the cognate accusative. The command referred to occurs in Acts 4:17, 18 and the refusal of Peter and John in Acts 4:20. To bring upon us (epagagein eph' hêmâs). Note repetition of epi. Second aorist active infinitive of epagô, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:1, 5. The Sanhedrin gladly took the blood of Christ on their heads and their children to Pilate (Mat 27:25). Paul tried to save the Jews (Acts 18:6; Acts 22:20). "This man" (tou anthrôpou toutou). Contemptuous slur and refusal to call the name of Jesus as in the Talmud later.

Verse 29

We must (dei). Moral necessity left them no choice. They stood precisely where Peter and John were when before the Sanhedrin before (Acts 4:20). Obey (peitharchein). Old verb from peithomai and archê, to obey a ruler. Only by Luke and Paul in the N.T.

Verse 30

Ye slew (diecheirisasthe). First aorist middle indicative of diacheirizomai, old verb from dia and cheir (hand), to take in hand, manage, to lay hands on, manhandle, kill. In the N.T. only here and Acts 26:21. Hanging him upon a tree (kremasantes epi xulou). First aorist active participle of kremannumi (kremannuô seen already in Mat 18:6 and Luke 23:39). Peter refers to Deut 21:23 as Paul does in Gal 3:13, the curse pronounced on every one who "hangs upon a tree."

Verse 31

Exalt (upsôsen) In contrast to their murder of Christ as in Acts 2:23. Peter repeats his charges with increased boldness. With his right hand (têi dexiâi autou). So instrumental case, or at his right hand (locative case), or even "to his right hand" (dative case) as in Acts 2:33. Prince and Saviour (archêgon kai sôtêra). See on Acts 3:15. Clearly "Prince" here. To give (tou dounai). Genitive of articular infinitive (second aorist active of didômi) of purpose.

Verse 32

We are witnesses (hêmeis esmen martures). As in Acts 2:32. Things (rhêmatôn). Literally, sayings, but like the Hebrew dabhar for "word" it is here used for "things." And so is the Holy Ghost (kai to pneuma to hagion). The word for "is" (estin) is not in the Greek, but this is plainly the meaning. Peter claims the witness of the Holy Spirit to the raising of Jesus Christ, God's Son, by the Father.

Verse 33

Were cut to the heart (dieprionto). Imperfect passive of diapriô old verb (dia, priô), to saw in two (dia), to cut in two (to the heart). Here it is rage that cuts into their hearts, not conviction of sin as in Acts 2:37. Only here and Acts 7:54 (after Stephen's speech) in the N.T. (cf. Simeon's prophecy in Luke 2:35). Were minded (eboulonto). Imperfect middle of boulomai. They were plotting and planning to kill (anelein, as in Acts 2:23; Luke 23:33 which see) then and there. The point in Acts 4:7 was whether the apostles deserved stoning for curing the cripple by demoniacal power, but here it was disobedience to the command of the Sanhedrin which was not a capital offence. "They were on the point of committing a grave judicial blunder" (Furneaux).

Verse 34

Gamaliel (Gamaliêl). The grandson of Hillel, teacher of Paul (Acts 22:3), later president of the Sanhedrin, and the first of the seven rabbis termed "Rabban." It is held by some that he was one of the doctors who heard the Boy Jesus in the temple (Luke 2:47) and that he was a secret disciple like Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, but there is no evidence of either position. Besides, he appears here as a loyal Pharisee and "a doctor of the law" (nomodidaskalos). This word appears already in Luke 5:17 of the Pharisaic doctors bent on criticizing Jesus, which see. Paul uses it of Judaizing Christians (1Ti 1:7). Like other great rabbis he had a great saying: "Procure thyself a teacher, avoid being in doubt; and do not accustom thyself to give tithes by guess." He was a man of judicial temper and not prone to go off at a tangent, though his brilliant young pupil Saul went to the limit about Stephen without any restraint on the part of Gamaliel so far as the record goes. Gamaliel champions the cause of the apostles as a Pharisee to score a point against the Sadducees. He acts as a theological opportunist, not as a disciple of Christ. He felt that a temporizing policy was best. There are difficulties in this speech of Gamaliel and it is not clear how Luke obtained the data for the address. It is, of course, possible that Saul was present and made notes of it for Luke afterwards. Had in honour of all the people (timios panti tôi laôi). Ethical dative. Timios from timê, old word meaning precious, dear. The men (tous anthrôpous). Correct text as in verse Acts 5:35, not "the apostles" as Textus Receptus.

Verse 35

Take heed (prosechete heautois). Hold your mind (noun, unexpressed) for or on yourselves (dative case), the usual idiom.

Verse 36

Theudas (Theudas). Luke represents Gamaliel here about A.D. 35 as speaking of a man who led a revolt before that of Judas the Galilean in connection with the enrolment under Quirinius (Cyrenius) in A.D. 6. But Josephus (Ant. XX. 5, 1) tells of a Theudas who led a similar insurrection in the reign of Claudius about A.D. 44 or 45. Josephus (Ant. XVIII. 1, 6; XX. 5, 2; War ii. 8, 1 and 17, 8) also describes Judas the Galilean or Gaulonite and places him about A.D. 6. It is not certain that Josephus and Luke (Gamaliel) refer to the same Theudas as the name is an abbreviation of Theodosus, a common name. "Josephus gives an account of four men named Simon who followed each other within forty years, and of three named Judas within ten years, who were all instigators of rebellion" (Hackett). If the same Theudas is meant, then either Josephus or Luke (Gamaliel) has the wrong historical order. In that case one will credit Luke or Josephus according to his estimate of the two as reliable historians. To be somebody (einai tina). Indirect assertion with the infinitive and the accusative of general reference (heauton) and tina, predicate accusative. Tina could be "anybody" or "somebody" according to context, clearly "somebody" of importance here. Joined themselves (proseklithê). Correct text and not prosekollêthê (Textus Receptus). First aorist passive indicative of prosklinô, old verb to lean towards, to incline towards. Here only in the N.T. Was slain (anêirethê). First aorist passive of anaireô (cf. verse Acts 5:33). Obeded (epeithonto). Imperfect middle, kept on obeying. Were dispersed (dialuthêsan). First aorist passive indicative (effective aorist) of dialuô, old verb to dissolve, to go to pieces. Here only in the N.T.

Of the enrolment (tês apographês). Described by Josephus (Ant. XV. 1, 1). The same word used by Luke of the first enrolment started by Augustus B.C. 8 to 6 (Luke 2:2). See the discussion on Luke 2:2. This is the second enrolment in the fourteen year cycle carried on for centuries as shown by numerous dated papyri. Ramsay (The Bearing of Recent Discovery on the Trustworthiness of the N.T.) has produced proof from inscriptions that Quirinius was twice in Syria as Luke reports (Robertson, Luke the Historian in the Light of Research). Drew away (apestêse). Causative sense of the first aorist active indicative of aphistêmi, made people (laon, no need of "some of the") to revolt (apostatize) with him. He also (kakeinos, crasis for kai ekeinos). That one, also. Were scattered abroad (dieskorpisthêsan). First aorist (effective) passive indicative of diaskorpizô, old verb to disperse. Used of sheep (Mark 14:27), of property (Luke 15:13). Aorist here after imperfect (epeithonto) as in verse Acts 5:36.

Verse 38

Refrain from (apostête apo). Second aorist (ingressive) active imperative of aphistêmi of verse Acts 5:37. Do ye stand off from these men. "Hands off" was the policy of Gamaliel. For if--be (hoti ean--êi). Hoti gives the reason for the advice. Gamaliel presents two alternatives in terms of two conditional clauses. The first one is stated as a condition of the third class, ean with the present subjunctive êi, undetermined with prospect of determination. Assuming that it is from men, "it will be overthrown" (kataluthêsetai, first future passive of kataluô, to loosen down like a falling house) as was true of the following of Theudas and Judas the Galilean.

Verse 39

But if it is of God (ei de ek theou estin). The second alternative is a condition of the first class, determined as fulfilled, ei with the present indicative. By the use of this idiom Gamaliel does put the case more strongly in favor of the apostles than against them. This condition assumes that the thing is so without affirming it to be true. On the basis of this alternative Gamaliel warns the Sanhedrin that they cannot "overthrow" (katalusai) these men for they in that case must "overthrow" God, lest haply ye be found (mê pote--hurethête, negative purpose with first aorist passive subjunctive) even to be fighting against God (kai theomachoi, late adjective from theos and machomai, in LXX and here only in the N.T.).

Verse 40

To him they agreed (epeisthêsan autôi). First aorist passive indicative of peithô, to persuade, the passive to be persuaded by, to listen to, to obey. Gamaliel's shrewd advice scored as against the Sadducaic contention (verse Acts 5:17). Not to speak (mê lalein). The Sanhedrin repeated the prohibition of Acts 4:18 which the apostles had steadily refused to obey. The Sanhedrin stood by their guns, but refused to shoot. It was a "draw" with Gamaliel as tactical victor over the Sadducees. Clearly now the disciples were set free because only the Sadducees had become enraged while the Pharisees held aloof.

Verse 41

They therefore (hoi men oun). No answering de. They were counted worthy to suffer dishonour for the Name (katêxiôthêsan huper tou onomatos atimasthênai). First aorist passive indicative of kataxioô, old verb to count worthy. Three times in N.T. (Luke 20:35; Acts 5:41; 2Th 1:5). First aorist passive infinitive of atimazô, old verb to make one dishonoured (atimos). Forms here an oxymoron (oxus, sharp, moros, foolish) pointedly foolish saying "which is witty or impressive through sheer contradiction or paradox as laborious idleness, sublime indifference" (Vincent). The apostles felt honoured by dishonour. Note the same use of "the Name" as in Jas 2:7; 3Jn 1:7. With the Jews this absolute use of "the Name" meant Jehovah. The Christians now apply it to Jesus.

Verse 42

Every day (pâsan hêmeran). Accusative of extent of time, all through every day. In the temple and at home (en tôi hierôi kai kat' oikon). This was a distinct triumph to go back to the temple where they had been arrested (verse Acts 5:25) and at home or from house to house, as it probably means (cf. Acts 2:46). It was a great day for the disciples in Jerusalem. They ceased not (ouk epauonto). Imperfect middle. They kept it up. Jesus as the Christ (ton Christon Iêsoun). Jesus is the direct object of the participles didaskontes (teaching) and euaggelizomenoi (preaching or evangelizing) while "the Christ" (ton Christon) is the predicate accusative. These words give the substance of the early apostolic preaching as these opening chapters of Acts show, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah of promise. Gamaliel had opened the prison doors for them and they took full advantage of the opportunity that now was theirs.

When the number of the disciples was multiplying (plêthunontôn tôn mathêtôn). Genitive absolute of plêthunô, old verb from plêthos, fulness, to increase. The new freedom from the intercession of Gamaliel was bearing rich fruit. A murmuring of the Grecian Jews (goggusmos tôn Hellênistôn). Late onomatopoeic word (LXX) from the late verb gogguzô, to mutter, to murmur. The substantive occurs also in John 7:12; Php 2:14; 1Pe 4:9. It is the secret grumblings that buzz away till they are heard. These "Grecian Jews" or Hellenists are members of the church in Jerusalem who are Jews from outside of Palestine like Barnabas from Cyprus. These Hellenists had points of contact with the Gentile world without having gone over to the habits of the Gentiles, the Jews of the Western Dispersion. They spoke Greek. Against the Hebrews (pros tous Ebraious). The Jewish Christians from Jerusalem and Palestine. The Aramaean Jews of the Eastern Dispersion are usually classed with the Hebrew (speaking Aramaic) as distinct from the Grecian Jews or Hellenists. Were neglected (paretheôrounto). Imperfect passive of paratheôreô, old verb, to examine things placed beside (para) each other, to look beyond (para also), to overlook, to neglect. Here only in the N.T. These widows may receive daily (kathêmerinêi, late adjective from kath' hêmeran, only here in the N.T.) help from the common fund provided for all who need it (Acts 4:32-37). The temple funds for widows were probably not available for those who have now become Christians. Though they were all Christians here concerned, yet the same line of cleavage existed as among the other Jews (Hebrew or Aramaean Jews and Hellenists). It is not here said that the murmuring arose among the widows, but because of them. Women and money occasion the first serious disturbance in the church life. There was evident sensitiveness that called for wisdom.

Verse 2

The multitude (to plêthos). The whole church, not just the 120. Fit (areston). Pleasing, verbal adjective from areskô, to please, old word, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 12:3; John 8:29; 1Jn 3:22. Non placet. Should forsake (kataleipsantas). Late first aorist active participle for usual second aorist katalipontas from kataleipô, to leave behind. Serve tables (diakonein trapezais). Present active infinitive of diakoneô from diakonos (dia and konis, dust), to raise a dust in a hurry, to serve, to minister either at table (John 12:20), or other service (John 12:25), to serve as deacon (1Ti 3:10, 13). "Tables" here hardly means money-tables as in John 2:15, but rather the tables used in the common daily distribution of the food (possibly including the love-feasts, Acts 2:43-47). This word is the same root as diakonia (ministration) in verse Acts 6:1 and diakonos (deacon) in Php 1:1; 1Ti 3:8-13. It is more frequently used in the N.T. of ministers (preachers) than of deacons, but it is quite possible, even probable, that the office of deacon as separate from bishop or elder grew out of this incident in Acts 6:1-7. Furneaux is clear that these "seven" are not to be identified with the later "deacons" but why he does not make clear.

Verse 3

Of good report (marturomenous). Present passive participle of martureô, to bear witness to. Men with a good reputation as well as with spiritual gifts (the Holy Spirit and wisdom). We may appoint (katastêsomen). Future active indicative of kathistêmi, we shall appoint. The action of the apostles follows the choice by the church, but it is promised as a certainty, not as a possibility. The Textus Receptus has a first aorist active subjunctive here (katastêsômen).

Verse 4

But we (hemeis de). In contrast to the work given the seven. The ministry of the word (têi diakoniâi tou logou). The same word diakoniâi employed in verse Acts 6:1, but here about preaching as the special ministry with which the apostles were concerned. For "continue steadfastly" (proskarterêsomen) see on Acts 2:42.

Verse 5

Pleased (êresen). Aorist active indicative of areskô like Latin placuit when a vote was taken. The use of enôpion before "the whole multitude" is like the LXX. They chose (exelexanto). First aorist middle indicative of eklegô, to pick out for oneself. Each one of the seven has a Greek name and was undoubtedly a Hellenist, not an Aramaean Jew. Consummate wisdom is here displayed for the murmuring had come from the Hellenists, seven of whom were chosen to take proper care of the widows of Hellenists. This trouble was settled to stay settled so far as we know. Nothing is here told of any of the seven except Stephen who is "a man full of faith and the Holy Spirit" and Nicolas "a proselyte of Antioch" (who was not then born a Jew, but had come to the Jews from the Greek world).

Verse 6

They laid their hands on them (epethêkan autois tas cheiras). First aorist active indicative of epitithêmi. Probably by the apostles who ratified the choice (verse Acts 6:3). The laying on of hands "was a symbol of the impartation of the gifts and graces which they needed to qualify them for the office. It was of the nature of a prayer that God would bestow the necessary gifts, rather than a pledge that they were actually conferred" (Hackett).

Verse 7

Increased (êuxanen). Imperfect active, kept on growing all the more because the apostles were now relieved from the daily ministration of the food. Multiplied (eplêthuneto). Imperfect passive. The two imperfects kept pace with each other. Of the priests (tôn hierôn). Who were usually Sadducees. It was a sad day for Annas and Caiaphas and all the sect of the Sadducees (Acts 5:17). Were obedient to (hupêkouon). Imperfect active of hupakouô, repetition, one after another. The faith (têi pistei). Here meaning the gospel, the faith system as in Rom 1:5; Gal 1:23; Jude 1:3, etc. Here the word means more than individual trust in Christ.

Verse 8

Wrought (epoiei). Imperfect active, repeatedly wrought. Evidently a man like Stephen would not confine his "ministry" to "serving tables." He was called in verse Acts 6:5 "full of faith and the Holy Spirit." Here he is termed "full of grace (so the best MSS., not faith) and power." The four words give a picture of remarkable attractiveness. The grace of God gave him the power and so "he kept on doing great wonders and signs among the people." He was a sudden whirlwind of power in the very realm of Peter and John and the rest.

Verse 9

The synagogue of the Libertines (ek tês sunagôgês tês legomenês Libertinôn). The Libertines (Latin libertinus, a freedman or the son of a freedman) were Jews, once slaves of Rome (perhaps descendants of the Jews taken to Rome as captives by Pompey), now set free and settled in Jerusalem and numerous enough to have a synagogue of their own. Schuerer calls a Talmudic myth the statement that there were 480 synagogues in Jerusalem. There were many, no doubt, but how many no one knows. These places of worship and study were in all the cities of the later times where there were Jews enough to maintain one. Apparently Luke here speaks of five such synagogues in Jerusalem (that of the Libertines, of the Cyrenians, of the Alexandrians, of Cilicia, and of Asia). There probably were enough Hellenists in Jerusalem to have five such synagogues. But the language of Luke is not clear on this point. He may make only two groups instead of five since he uses the article tôn twice (once before Libertinôn kai Kurênaiôn kai Alexandreôn, again before apo Kilikias kai Asias). He also changes from the genitive plural to apo before Cilicia and Asia. But, leaving the number of the synagogues unsettled whether five or two, it is certain that in each one where Stephen appeared as a Hellenist preaching Jesus as the Messiah he met opposition. Certain of them "arose" (anestêsan) "stood up" after they had stood all that they could from Stephen, "disputing with Stephen" (sunzêtountes tôi Stephanôi). Present active participle of sunzêteô, to question together as the two on the way to Emmaus did (Luke 24:15). Such interruptions were common with Jews. They give a skilled speaker great opportunity for reply if he is quick in repartee. Evidently Stephen was fully equipped for the emergency. One of their synagogues had men from Cilicia in it, making it practically certain that young Saul of Tarsus, the brilliant student of Gamaliel, was present and tried his wits with Stephen. His ignominious defeat may be one explanation of his zest in the stoning of Stephen (Acts 8:1).

Verse 10

They were not able to withstand (ouk ischuon antistênai). Imperfect active of ischuô, to have strength, and ingressive second aorist active (intransitive) infinitive of anthistêmi. They continued unable (without strength enough) to take a stand against. Stephen knocked them down, Saul included, as fast as they got up. Stephen was like a battery charged and in action. The wisdom and spirit (têi sôphiâi kai pneumatî). Dative case. They stood up against Stephen's wisdom and the Holy Spirit "by whom he spoke" (hôi elalei). Instrumental case and the relative agrees with "Spirit." He kept on speaking so (elalei, imperfect active). It was a desperate situation.

Verse 11

Then they suborned men (tote hupebalon andras). Second aorist active indicative of hupoballô, old verb, but here only in the N.T., to put under like a carpet, to bring men under one's control by suggestion or by money. One recalls the plight of Caiaphas in the trial of Jesus when he sought false witnesses. Subornaverunt. They put these men forward in an underhand way for fraud. Blasphemous words against Moses and God (blasphêma eis Môusên kai ton theon). The punishment for blasphemy was stoning to death. See Mat 12:31 for discussion of the word blasphêmia, blasphêmeô, blasphêmos, all in the N.T. from blaptô, to harm, and phêmê, speech, harmful speech, or blax, stupid, and phêmê. But the charge against Stephen was untrue. Please note that Moses is here placed before God and practically on a par with God in the matter of blasphemy. The purpose of this charge is to stir the prejudices of the people in the matter of Jewish rights and privileges. It is the Pharisees who are conducting this attack on Stephen while the Sadducees had led them against Peter and John. The position of Stephen is critical in the extreme for the Sadducees will not help him as Gamaliel did the apostles.

Verse 12

They stirred up the people (sunekinêsan ton laon). They shook the people together like an earthquake. First aorist active indicative of sunkineô, to throw into commotion. Old verb, but here only in the N.T. The elders and the scribes (Pharisees) are reached, but no word about the Sadducees. This is the first record of the hostility of the masses against the disciples (Vincent). Came upon him (epistantes). Second aorist (ingressive) active participle of ephistêmi. Rushed at him. Seized (sunêrpsan). Effective aorist active of sunarpazô as if they caught him after pursuit.

Verse 13

False witnesses (marturas pseudeis). Just as Caiaphas did with Jesus. Ceaseth not (ou pauetai). Wild charge just like a false witness that Stephen talks in the synagogues against the law and the holy temple.

Verse 14

We have heard him say (akêkoamen autou legontos). The only direct testimony and evidently wrong. Curiously like the charge brought against Jesus before Caiaphas that he would destroy the temple and build it again in three days. Undoubtedly Stephen had said something about Christianity before as meant for others besides Jews. He had caught the spirit of Jesus about worship as shown to the woman at Sychar in John 4:1-42 that God is spirit and to be worshipped by men anywhere and everywhere without having to come to the temple in Jerusalem. It was inflammable material surely and it was easy to misrepresent and hard to clear up. This Jesus of Nazareth (Iêsous ho Nazôraios houtos). With contempt.

Verse 15

As if the face of an angel (hōsei prosôpon aggelou). Even his enemies saw that, wicked as they were. See Ex 34:30 for the face of Moses when he came down from Sinai (2Co 3:7). Page quotes Tennyson: "God's glory smote him on the face." Where were Peter and John at this crisis? Apparently Stephen stands alone before the Sanhedrin as Jesus did. But he was not alone for he saw Jesus standing at the right hand of God (Acts 7:56). There was little that Peter and John could have done if they had been present. Gamaliel did not interpose this time for the Pharisees were behind the charges against Stephen, false though they were as Gamaliel could have found out.

Are these things so? (ei tauta houtôs echei). On this use of ei in a direct question see on Acts 1:6. Literally "Do these things hold thus?" A formal question by the high priest like our "Do you plead guilty, or not guilty?" (Furneaux). The abrupt question of the high priest would serve to break the evident spell of the angelic look on Stephen's face. Two charges had been made against Stephen (1) speaking against the holy temple, (2) changing the customs which Moses had delivered. Stephen could not give a yes or no answer to these two charges. There was an element of truth in each of them and a large amount of error all mixed together. So he undertakes to explain his real position by the historical method, that is to say, by a rapid survey of God's dealing with the people of Israel and the Gentiles. It is the same method adopted by Paul in Pisidian Antioch (Acts 13:16) after he had become the successor of Stephen in his interpretation of the universal mission of Christianity. If one is disposed to say that Luke made up this speech to suit Stephen's predicament, he has to explain how the style is less Lukan than the narrative portions of Acts with knowledge of Jewish traditions that a Greek would not be likely to know. Precisely how Luke obtained the data for the speech we do not know, but Saul heard it and Philip, one of the seven, almost certainly. Both could have given Luke help about it. It is even possible that some one took notes of this important address. We are to remember also that the speech was interrupted at the end and may not include all that Stephen meant to say. But enough is given to give us a good idea of how Stephen met the first charge "by showing that the worship of God is not confined to Jerusalem or the Jewish temple" (Page). Then he answers the second charge by proving that God had many dealings with their fathers before Moses came and that Moses foretold the coming of the Messiah who is now known to be Jesus. It is at this point (verse Acts 7:51) that Stephen becomes passionate and so powerful that the wolves in the Sanhedrin lose all self-control. It is a great and masterful exposition of the worldwide mission of the gospel of Christ in full harmony with the Great Commission of Christ. The apostles had been so busy answering the Sadducees concerning the Resurrection of Christ and maintaining their freedom to teach and preach that they had not pushed the world-wide propaganda of the gospel as Jesus had commanded after they had received the Promise of the Father. But Stephen had proclaimed the same message of Christ and was now facing the same fate. Peter's mind had been enlightened by the Holy Spirit so that he could rightly interpret Joel and David in the light of Pentecost. "So Stephen read the history of the Old Testament with new eyes in the light of the life and death of Jesus" (Furneaux).

Verse 2

Brethren and fathers (andres adelphoi kai pateres). The spectators (brethren) and members of the Sanhedrin (fathers) as Paul in Acts 22:1. Hearken (akousate). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative, Give me your attention now. The God of glory (Ho theos tês doxês). The God characterized by glory (genitive case, genus or kind) as seen in the Shekinah, the visible radiance of God. Jesus is also called "the Glory"=the Shekinah in Jas 2:1. Cf. Ex 25:22; Ex 40:34; Lev 9:6; Heb 9:5. By these words Stephen refutes the charge of blasphemy against God in Acts 6:11. Appeared (ôphthê). First aorist passive indicative of horaô. See on Luke 23:43. Before there was temple or tabernacle and away over in Mesopotamia (Ur of the Chaldees, Gen 11:31), even before (prin ê with the infinitive) he dwelt in Haran (Charran, or Carrae not far from Edessa, where Crassus met death after his defeat by the Parthians B.C. 53).

Verse 3

Which I shall shew thee (hên an soi deixô). Indefinite relative clause with an and the aorist active subjunctive (same form in first person singular as the future active indicative). Abraham followed on as God led him.

Verse 4

When his father was dead (meta to apothanein auton). Meta with the accusative of the articular infinitive and the accusative of general reference (auton), regular Greek idiom. In Gen 11:32 it is stated that Terah died at Haran at the age of 205. There are various explanations of the discrepancy, but no one that seems certain. It is possible (Hackett, Felten) that Abraham is mentioned first in Gen 11:26 because he became the most prominent and was really younger than Haran his brother who died before the first migration who was really sixty years older than Abraham. According to this view Terah was 130 years old at the birth of Abraham, leaving Abraham 75 at the death of Terah (205). Wherein ye now dwell (eis hên humeis nun katoikeite). Note eis in the sense of en as often. Note also emphatic use of humeis (ye) and now (nun).

Verse 5

Not so much as to set his foot on (oude bêma podos). From Deut 2:5. Old word from bainô, to go, to step. "Stepping of a foot," only instance of this original meaning in the N.T. From this it comes to mean a platform reached by steps, official seat of a judge (Mat 27:19). The field purchased by Abraham (Gen 23:9-17) was not a gift from God. Promised (epêggeilato). First aorist middle indicative of epaggellô, common verb. See Gen 12:7; Gen 17:8; Gen 48:4 for this promise. So God appeared again to Abraham in a strange land. In possession (eis kataschesin). Late word, in LXX, and in N.T. only here and verse Acts 7:45. From katechô, to hold back, then to hold fast (or down), to possess. It was fulfilled in the descendants of Abraham. When as yet he had no child (ouk ontos autôi teknou). Genitive absolute with negative ouk rather than mê to emphasize actual absence of a child. He had only the promise of God about the land and the child.

Verse 6

On this wise (houtôs). A free quotation from Gen 15:13. Should sojourn (estai paroikon). Shall be a sojourner, Paroikos (para, beside, oikos, home), one dwelling near one's home, but not of it, so a stranger, foreigner, old word, often in LXX, temporary residence without full rights of citizenship (Acts 7:29; Acts 13:17), and descriptive of Christians (Eph 2:19; 1Pe 1:17; 1Pe 2:11). In a strange land (en gêi allotriâi). In a land not one's own, that belongs to another, alien as in Mat 17:25, which see. Four hundred years (etê tetrakosia). Accusative of duration of time. As in Gen 15:13, but a round number as in Ex 12:40 the time is 430 years. But in Gal 3:17 Paul, following the LXX in Ex 12:40, takes the 430 years to cover the period in Canaan and the stay in Egypt, cutting the sojourn in Egypt to about half. Josephus gives it both ways. Hackett suggests two solutions, one that there were two ways of reckoning the period among the Jews with no way of settling it, the other that by the 430 years in Egypt the writers meant to include Canaan also as merely the preliminary to the period in Egypt.

Verse 7

Will I judge (krinô egô). Future (accent on ô) active indicative of krinô and egô (I) expressed is emphatic. In this place (en tôi topôi toutôi). Quoted from Ex 3:12 and referring to Sinai or Horeb, but Stephen applies it to the Promised Land.

Verse 8

The covenant of circumcision (diathêkên peritomês). A covenant marked by (genitive) circumcision (no article) of which circumcision is the sign (Rom 4:11) as set forth in Gen 17:9-14. In the ancient Greek diathêkê was usually will (Latin, testamentum) and sunthêkê was used for covenant (sun, together, rather than dia, between). But the LXX and the N.T. use diathêkê for covenant (will in Heb 9:15) as Lightfoot on Gal 3:16 says: "The LXX translation and New Testament writers probably preferred diathêkê as better expressing the free grace of God than sunthêkê." And so (kai houtôs). After the covenant was made and as a sign and seal of it.

Verse 9

Moved with jealousy (zêlôsantes). First aorist active participle of zêloô, old verb from zêlos (Acts 5:17), to burn or boil with zeal, and then with envy as here (Acts 17:5, etc.) and Gen 37:11.

Verse 10

Delivered him out (exeilato auton ek). First aorist middle indicative of exaireô, old verb to take out, snatch out. Note repetition of ek. Pharaoh King of Egypt (Pharaô basileôs Aiguptou). Pharaoh is not a name, but a title, the Egyptian perff meaning great house.

Verse 11

Found no sustenance (ouch hêuriskon chortasmata). Imperfect active, kept on not finding. Chortasmata is from chortaz", originally to feed with grass (chortos) or herbs. Old word, but only here in the N.T. and includes food for both men and animals. In Gen 24:25, 32 it is fodder for the cattle, a first necessity for owners of herds of cattle.

Verse 12

That there was corn (onta sitia). Participle (present active of eimi) in indirect discourse, after akousas, "heard of corn being in Egypt." Sitia is diminutive of sitos and means grain (wheat, barley, not our maize or Indian corn), old word also for provisions, victuals, here only in the N.T. The first time (prôton). While Jacob himself remained in Canaan before he went down to Egypt and died there (verse Acts 7:15).

Verse 13

At the second time (en tôi deuterôi). This expression only here in the N.T. This second visit is recorded in Gen 45:1. Became manifest (phaneron egeneto). In Gen 41:12 the fact that Joseph was a Hebrew had been incidentally mentioned to Pharaoh, but now it was made clear to him.

Verse 14

Three-score and fifteen souls (en psuchais hebdomêkonta pente). Stephen follows the LXX which counts some grandchildren of Joseph and so makes it 75 whereas Gen 46:26-27 has 66 and then the next verse makes it 70 including Jacob and Joseph with his two sons. The use of en means "consisting in."

Verse 16

They were carried over unto Shechem (metetethêsan eis Suchem). First aorist passive of metatithêmi, only here in the N.T. in this sense of changing places. Jacob was buried in the cave of Machpelah (Gen 50:13). The O.T. does not say where the sons of Jacob were buried save that Joseph was buried in Shechem (Jos 24:32). Possibly only "our fathers" without Jacob is the subject of "were carried." Which Abraham bought (hôi ônêsato Abraam). Hackett is sure that our present text is wrong. Hort notes some sixty "primitive errors" in the critical text of the N.T. It is possible that this is also one. If "Jacob" is substituted for "Abraham," the matter is cleared up. "It is quite as likely, judging a priori, that the word producing the error escaped from some early copyist as that so glaring an error was committed by Stephen" (Hackett). At any rate Abraham bought a burying-place, the cave of Machpelah, from Ephron the Hittite at Hebron (Gen 23:16), while Jacob bought a field from the sons of Hamor at Shechem (Gen 33:19; Jos 24:32). Abraham had built an altar at Shechem when he entered Canaan (Gen 12:6). It is possible, of course, that Abraham also bought the ground on which the altar stood. In Shechem (en Suchem). This is the reading of Aleph B C instead of the Textus Receptus tou Suchem which makes it "Hamar the father of Sichem." "In Shechem" is the true reading.

Verse 17

Drew nigh (êggizen). Imperfect active, was drawing nigh.

Verse 18

Another king (basileus heteros). A different kind of king also, probably a king of the new dynasty after the shepherd kings had been expelled from Egypt. Who knew not Joseph (hos ouk êidei ton Iôsêph). Second past perfect of oida used like an imperfect. Joseph's history and services meant nothing to the new king. "The previous dynasty had been that of the Hyksos: the new king was Ahmes who drove out the Hyksos" (Knobel).

Dealt subtilly (katasophisamenos). First aorist middle participle of katasophizomai, late compound (kata and sophizô, old verb, to make wise, to become wise, then to play the sophist), perfective use of kata. In the LXX, but here only in the N.T. To use fraud, craft, deceit. That they should cast out their babes (tou poiein ta brephê ektheta). Tou poiein (genitive of the articular present infinitive) can be either design or result. The Revised Version here takes it as purpose while the Authorized as result. In either case Pharaoh required the Israelites to expose their children to death, a possible practice done voluntarily in heathen China and by heathen in so-called Christian lands. But the Israelites fought against such an iniquity. The word ektheta (exposed, cast out) is a verbal adjective from ektithêmi. It is an old word, but here only in the N.T. and not in the LXX. To the end they might not live (eis to mê zôogoneisthai). Purpose with eis and the articular infinitive (present middle). This compound verb is from zôogonos (from zôos, alive, and genô, to bear) and is used by late writers and the LXX. It is three times in the N.T. (here, Luke 17:33; 1Ti 6:13) in the sense to preserve alive.

Verse 20

Exceeding fair (asteios tôi theôi). Ethical dative, fair to God (as God looked at him). Asteios is from astu, city, and so means "of the city," with city manners and polish. Old word, only twice in the N.T. (here and Heb 11:23) and both times about Moses and taken from Ex 2:2. He was nourished (anetraphê). Second aorist passive indicative of anatrephô. He was brought up at home for three months in defiance of the new Pharaoh.

Verse 21

When he was cast out (ektethentos autou). Genitive absolute with first aorist passive participle of ektithêmi. Took up (aneilato). Second aorist middle indicative (with first aorist vowel a instead of e as often in the Koin.) of anaireô, common in the N.T. in the sense of take up and make away with, to kill as in verse Acts 7:28, but here only in the N.T. in the original sense of taking up from the ground and with the middle voice (for oneself). Quoted here from Ex 2:5. The word was used of old for picking up exposed children as here. Vincent quotes Aristophanes (Clouds, 531): "I exposed (the child), and some other women, having taken it, adopted (aneileto) it." Vulgate has sustulit. "Adopted" is the idea here. "After the birth of a child the father took it up to his bosom, if he meant to rear it; otherwise it was doomed to perish" (Hackett). Nourished him for her own son (anethrepsato auton heautêi eis huion). Literally, "she nursed him up for herself (heautêi besides middle voice) as a son." This use of eis=as occurs in the old Greek, but is very common in the LXX as a translation of the Hebrew le. The tradition is that she designed Moses for the throne as the Pharaoh had no son (Josephus, Ant. ii. 9, 7).

Verse 22

Was instructed (epaideuthê). First aorist passive indicative of paideuô, to train a child (pais), the usual idea in ancient Greek as here. The notion of chastisement (Heb 12:6) is also in the old Greek and especially in the LXX and the N.T. Here with instrumental case (pasêi sophiâi) or the locative. The accusative would usually be retained after this verb. The priestly caste in Egypt was noted for their knowledge of science, astronomy, medicine, and mathematics. This reputation was proverbial (1Ki 4:30). Modern discoveries have thrown much light on the ancient civilization of Egypt. Moses, like Paul, was a man of the schools. Mighty in his words and works (dunatos en logois kai ergois autou). The same phrase used of Jesus in Luke 24:19. The adjective dunatos is employed of Apollos as an interpreter of the Scriptures (Acts 18:24). Moses did not have the rhetorical skill or eloquence of Aaron (Ex 4:10), but his words like his deeds carried weight and power.

Verse 23

When he was well-nigh forty years old (Hôs eplêrouto autôi tessarakontaetês chronos). A rather awkward Greek idiom for the English: "When a forty year old time (same idiom in Acts 13:18 and only twice in the N.T.) was being fulfilled (eplêrouto, imperfect passive) for him (dative case)." The life of Moses is divided into three periods of forty years each (in Egypt 40 years, in Midian 40, governed Israel 40, 120 when he died, Deut 34:7). It came into his heart (anebê epi tèn kardia autou). Second aorist active indicative of anabainô, common verb. Came up as if from the lower deeps of his nature. This Hebrew image occurs in Jer 3:16; Isa 65:17; 1Co 2:9. To visit (episkepsasthai). First aorist middle infinitive of episkeptomai, old verb to go to see for oneself, with his own eyes, to help if possible. Used of God visiting his people (Luke 7:16). Our "visit" is from Latin video, to see, visito, to go to see. During the Welsh mining troubles the Prince of Wales made a sympathetic visit to see for himself the actual condition of the coal miners. Moses desired to know first hand how his kinsmen were faring.

Verse 24

Suffer wrong (adikoumenon). Present passive participle of adikêo. By blows (Ex 2:11). Avenged (epoiêsen ekdikêsin). First aorist active indicative of poiêo. This idiom occurs in Luke 18:7 with ekdikêsin (this from ekdikeô and that from ekdikos without right or law dikê and then exacting law of right out of ek one, exacting vengeance). Him that was oppressed (tôi kataponoumenôi). Present passive articular participle in the dative case of kataponeo, to tire down with toil, to treat roughly, common in late Greek, in the N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:7 (sore distressed). The man was on the point of being overcome. Smiting (pataxas). First aorist active participle of patassô, in the old Greek the beat of the heart, only in the LXX and N.T. to smite a deadly blow as here like plêssô.

Verse 25

He supposed (enomizen). Imperfect active of nomizô. He was supposing, Stephen explains, when he smote the Egyptian. That his brethren understood (sunienai tous adelphous). Present active infinitive of sunîemi, to send (put) together, to grasp, to comprehend, in indirect discourse with the accusative of general reference. By his hand was giving them deliverance (dia cheiros autou didôsin sotêrian autois). Picturesque use of "hand" as in Acts 2:23, present active indicative of didômi retained in indirect discourse after imperfect enomizen. But they understood not (hoi de ou sunêkan). Page notes "the rhetorical power of these words" from Stephen. Sunêkan (first aorist indicative, k aorist) refers to sunienai just before.

Verse 26

The day following (têi epiousêi hêmerâi). Locative case, "on the following day" (from epeimi, to come upon, to approach, present active participle epiôn -ousa, -on). Common phrase in old Greek both with hêmera (day) as here and without as Acts 16:11. Only in Acts in the N.T. Appeared (ôphthê). First aorist passive indicative of horaô not with idea that only a vision but rather that it was sudden or unexpected. As they strove (machomenois). Present middle participle of machomai, actually fighting. Would have set them at one again (sunêllassen autous eis eirênen). Better, he tried to reconcile them (or change them into peace). It is the conative imperfect active as in Mat 3:14 of sunallassô, only here in the N.T. though common in the old Greek. Vulgate has reconciliabat. The usual word in the N.T. for reconcile is katallassô. Do ye wrong one to another (adikeite allêlous). The same word used in verse Acts 7:24 of the wrong done one of the Hebrews by the Egyptian, but here both are "brethren."

Verse 27

Thrust him away (apôsato auton). First aorist middle indicative (Koin, for Attic apeôsato) of apôtheô, to push away from oneself in middle voice as here, common in old Greek. Again in verse Acts 7:39; Acts 13:46; Rom 11:1; 1Ti 1:19. It is always the man who is doing the wrong who is hard to reconcile.

Verse 28

Wouldest thou kill me? (mê anelein me su theleis). Expecting the answer no, but a thrust direct at Moses, Do you wish to kill me (note me su right together, me thou). See Ex 2:14 quoted by Stephen.

Verse 29

Sojourner (paroikos). Temporary dweller (cf. Abraham in verse Acts 7:6) in Midian though for forty years.

Verse 30

Sentence begins with genitive absolute again. In a flame of fire in a bush (en phlogi puros batou). Horeb in Ex 3:1; but Sinai and Horeb were "probably peaks of one mountain range" (Page), Horeb "the mountain of the dried-up ground," Sinai "the mountain of the thorns." Literally, "in the flame of fire of a bush" (two genitives, puros and batou dependent on phlogi, flame). Descriptive genitives as in Acts 9:15; 2Th 1:8. Batos (bush) is the wild acacia (mimosa nilotica). In Ex 3:20 it is Jehovah who speaks. Hence "angel" here with Stephen is understood to be the Angel of the Presence, the Eternal Logos of the Father, the Angel of Jehovah.

Verse 31

The sight (to horama). Used of visions in the N.T. as in Mat 17:9. As he drew near (proserchomenou autou). Genitive absolute with present middle participle of proserchomai. A voice of the Lord (phônê kuriou). Here the angel of Jehovah of verse Acts 7:30 is termed Jehovah himself. Jesus makes powerful use of these words in his reply to the Sadducees in defence of the doctrine of the resurrection and the future life (Mark 12:26; Mat 22:32; Luke 20:37) that God here describes himself as the God of the living. Trembled (entromos genomenos). Literally, becoming tremulous or terrified. The adjective entromos (en, tromos from tremô, to tremble, to quake) occurs in Plutarch and the LXX. In the N.T. only here and Acts 16:29. Durst not (ouk etolma). Imperfect active, was not daring, negative conative imperfect.

Verse 33

Holy ground (gê hagia). The priests were barefooted when they ministered in the temple. Moslems enter their mosques barefooted today. Cf. Jos 5:15. Sandal (hupodêma, bound under) is here "a distributive singular" (Hackett). Even the ground near the bush was "holy," a fine example for Stephen's argument.

Verse 34

I have surely seen (idôn eidon). Imitation of the Hebrew infinitive absolute, (Ex 3:7) "Seeing I saw" (cf. Heb 6:14). The affliction (tên kakôsin). From kakoô, to treat evilly (from kakos, evil). Old word, here only in the N.T. and from Ex 3:7. Groaning (stenagmou). Old word from stenazô, to sigh, to groan. In the N.T. only here and Rom 8:26. Root sten in our word stentorian. I am come down (katebên). Second aorist active indicative of katabainô, I came down. To deliver (exelesthai). Second aorist middle infinitive of exaireô, to take out for myself. I will send (aposteilô). First aorist active subjunctive (hortatory of apostellô, "Let me send").

Verse 35

This Moses (Touton ton Mousên). Rhetorical repetition follows this description of Moses (five times, anaphora, besides the use here, six cases of houtos here about Moses: verse Acts 7:35 twice, Acts 7:36, 37, 38, 40). Clearly Stephen means to draw a parallel between Moses and Jesus. They in Egypt denied (êrnêsanto) Moses as now you the Jews denied (êrnêsasthe, Acts 3:13) Jesus. Those in Egypt scouted Moses as "ruler and judge" (verses Acts 7:27, 35, archonta kai dikastên) and God "hath sent" (apestalken, perfect active indicative, state of completion) Moses "both a ruler and a deliverer" (archonta kai lutrôtên) as Jesus was to be (Luke 1:68; Luke 2:38; Heb 9:12; Tit 2:14). "Ransomer" or "Redeemer" (lutrôtês) is not found elsewhere, lutron (ransom), lutroô, to ransom, and lutrôsis, ransoming or redemption, are found often. In Acts 5:31 Christ is termed "Prince and Saviour." With the hand (sun cheiri). So the correct text. The Pharisees had accused Stephen of blaspheming "against Moses and God" (Acts 6:11). Stephen here answers that slander by showing how Moses led the people out of Egypt in co-operation (sun) with the hand of the Angel of Jehovah.

Verse 37

Like unto me (hôs eme). This same passage Peter quoted to the crowd in Solomon's Porch (Acts 3:22). Stephen undoubtedly means to argue that Moses was predicting the Messiah as a prophet like himself who is no other than Jesus so that these Pharisees are in reality opposing Moses. It was a neat turn.

Verse 38

In the church in the wilderness (en têi ekklesiâi en têi erêmôi). Better rendered "congregation" here as in Heb 2:12 (Ps 22:22), the people of Israel gathered at Mt. Sinai, the whole nation. Moses is here represented as receiving the law from an angel as in Heb 2:2; Gal 3:19 (Deut 33:2, LXX) and so was a mediator (mesitês) or middle man between the angel and the people whereas Jesus is the Mediator of a better covenant (Heb 8:6). But Exodus does not speak of an angel. Living oracles (logia zônta). A logion is a little word (diminutive of logos). Common in the old Greek, LXX, Philo, in ecclesiastical writers for sayings of Christ, Papias (for instance) saying that Matthew wrote in Hebrew (Aramaic) "Logia of Jesus." Oxyrhynchus papyri fragments called "Logia of Jesus" are of much interest though only fragments. The Greeks used it of the "oracles" or brief sayings from Delphi. In the N.T. the word occurs only four times (Acts 7:38; Rom 3:2; Heb 5:12; 1Pe 4:11). Here the participle zônta, living, is the same used by Peter (1Pe 2:4.), stone (lithos) of Christ and Christians. The words from God to Moses are still "living" today. In 1Pe 4:11 the word is applied to one who speaks logia theou (oracles of God). In Rom 3:2 Paul refers to the substance of the law and of prophecy. In Heb 5:12 the writer means the substance of the Christian religious teaching.

Verse 39

To whom (hôi). That is Moses, this Moses. Would not be (ouk êthelêsan genesthai). Aorist active, negative aorist, were unwilling to become (genesthai) obedient. Thrust him from them (apôsanto). Indirect middle of the very verb used of the man (verse Acts 7:27) who "thrust" Moses away from him. Turned back (estraphêsan). Second aorist passive indicative of strephô, to turn. They yearned after the fleshpots of Egypt and even the gods of Egypt. It is easy now to see why Stephen has patiently led his hearers through this story. He is getting ready for the home-thrust.

Verse 40

Gods which shall go before us (theous hoi proporeusontai hêmôn). Ex 32:1. As guides and protectors, perhaps with some allusion to the pillar of fire and of cloud that had gone before them (Ex 13:21). The future indicative here with hôi (relative) expresses purpose. Ye wot not (ouk oidamen). We do not know. How quickly they had forgotten both God and Moses while Moses was absent in the mount with God. Become of him (egeneto autôi). Happened to him. "This" (houtos) here is a contemptuous allusion to Moses by the people.

Verse 41

They made a calf (emoschopoiêsan). First aorist active indicative of moschopoieô, here only in the N.T. and unknown elsewhere. The LXX (Ex 32:3) has epoiêse moschon from which phrase the word is evidently made. Aaron made the calf, but so did the people (Ex 32:35). The idol (tôi eidôlôi). Stephen calls it by the right name. The people said it was their way of worshipping Jehovah! So the Egyptians worshipped the bull Apis at Memphis as the symbol of Osiris (the sun). They had another sacred bull Mnevis at Leontopolis. Eidôlon (from eidōs, form or figure) is the image or likeness of anything. The heathen worship the god through the image or idol. Rejoiced (euphrainonto). Imperfect, middle, kept on rejoicing (Ex 32:6, 18) or making merry.

Verse 42

Gave them up (paredôken). First aorist active indicative of paradidômi. This same form occurs three times like clods on a coffin in a grave in Rom 1:24, 26, 28 where Paul speaks of God giving the heathen up to their lusts. To serve the host of heaven (latreuëin têi stratiâi tou ouranou). The verb latreuô is used of the worship of God (Mat 4:10) as well as of idols as here (from latron, hire, latris, hireling, then to serve). But the worship of the host of heaven (Deut 17:3; 2Ki 17:16; 2Ki 21:3; 2Ch 33:3, 5; Jer 8:2; Jer 19:13) is Sabaism or worship of the host (stratia) of heaven (sun, moon, and stars) instead of the Lord of hosts. This star-worship greatly injured the Jews. In the book of the prophets (en biblôi tôn prophêtôn). That is the twelve minor prophets which the Jews counted as one book (cf. Acts 13:40). This quotation is from Amos 5:25-27. The greater prophets were Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel. Slain beasts (sphagia). Here only in the N.T. (from Amos 5:25) sphagê, slaughter, sphazô, to slay.

Verse 43

The tabernacle of Moloch (tên skênên tou Moloch). Or tent of Moloch which they took up after each halt instead of the tabernacle of Jehovah. Moloch was the god of the Amorites to whom children were offered as live sacrifices, an ox-headed image with arms outstretched in which children were placed and hollow underneath so that fire could burn underneath. The star of the god Rephan (to astron tou theou Rompha). Spelled also Romphan and Remphan. Supposed to be Coptic for the star Saturn to which the Egyptians, Arabs, and Phoenicians gave worship. But some scholars take the Hebrew Kiyyoon to mean statues and not a proper name at all, "statues of your gods" carried in procession, making "figures" (tupous) with both "tabernacle" and "star" which they carried in procession. I will carry (metoikiô). Attic future of metoikisô from metoikizô. Beyond Babylon (epekeina Babulônos). The Hebrew and the LXX have "beyond Damascus." An adverbial preposition (ep' ekeina with merê understood) used in the old Greek and the LXX with the ablative case and meaning "beyond." Here only in the N.T. in quotation from Amos 5:27.

Verse 44

The tabernacle of the testimony (hê skênê tou marturiou). Probably suggested by the mention of "the tabernacle of Moloch" (verse Acts 7:43). See on Mat 17:4 for discussion of skênê (from skia, shadow, root ska, to cover). This first sanctuary was not the temple, but the tent in the wilderness. "Stephen passes on from the conduct of the Israelites to his other argument that God is not necessarily worshipped in a particular spot" (Page). According to the figure (kata ton tupon). According to the type or pattern. Tupos is from tuptô, to strike, to smite, and is the print of the blow (John 20:25), then the figure formed by a blow or impression like our type, a model or example. Quoted from Ex 25:40. Common word in the old Greek. That he had seen (hon heôrakei). Past perfect active of horaô, to see (double reduplication).

Verse 45

Which (hên). Agreeing with skênên, not with tupon. In their turn (diadexamanoi). First aorist middle participle of diadexomai, to receive through another, to receive in succession or in turn. Late Greek, only here in N.T. Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 115) argues from a second century B.C. papyrus that diadochos means rather deputy or court official than successor. With Joshua (meta Iêsou). With Jesus, the Greek form of Joshua (contracted from Jehoshua, Mat 1:21), as in Heb 4:8. When they entered on the possession of the nations (en têi kataschesei tôn ethnôn). Literally "in (or at the time of) the possession of the nations." See on Acts 7:5 for the only other N.T. instance of kataschesis. Which (hôn). The nations, genitive by attraction to case of ethnôn. Thrust out (exôsen). First aorist active indicative of exôtheô, to push out, common verb, here, only in N.T. save some MSS. in Acts 27:39.

Verse 46

Asked (êitêsato). Aorist middle (indirect) indicative, asked for himself (as a favour to himself). Cf. 2Sa 7:2. A habitation (skênôma). Like Ps 132:5, but it was a house that David proposed to build (2Sa 7:2), not a tent (skênê) which already existed. Skênôma here means a more permanent abode (oikon, house, in verse Acts 7:47), though from the same root as skênê.

Verse 48

Howbeit (all'). By contrast with what Solomon did and David planned. Note emphatic position of "not" (all' ouch), "But not does the Most High dwell." The presence of the Most High is not confined in any building, even one so splendid as Solomon's Temple as Solomon himself foresaw and acknowledged in his prayer (1Ki 8:27; 2Ch 6:18). In houses made with hands (en cheiropoiêtois). No word here for "houses" or "temples" in correct text (naois temples in Textus Receptus). Literally, "In things made with hands" (cheir, hand, poiêtos, verbal adjective of poieô). It occurs in Mark 14:58 of the temple and of the sanctuary of Moab (Isa 16:12). It occurs also in Acts 7:24; Heb 9:11, 24; Eph 2:11. Common in the old Greek. The prophet (ho prophêtês). Isa 66:1. Isaiah taught plainly that heaven is God's throne.

Verse 49

What manner of house (Poion oikon). What sort of a house? This interrogative is sometimes scornful as in Acts 4:7; Luke 6:32 (Page). So Stephen shows by Isaiah that Solomon was right that the temple was not meant to "confine" God's presence and that Jesus had rightly shown that God is a spirit and can be worshipped anywhere by any individual of any race or land. It is a tremendous argument for the universality and spirituality of Christianity free from the shackles of Jewish racial and national limitations, but its very strength only angered the Sanhedrin to desperation.

Stiffnecked (sklêrotrachêloi). From sklêros (hard) and trachêlos, neck, both old words, but this compound only in the LXX and here alone in the N.T. Critics assume that Stephen was interrupted at this point because of the sharp tone of the speech. That may be true, but the natural climax is sufficient explanation. Uncircumcised in heart (aperitmêtoi kardiais). Late adjective common in LXX and here only in the N.T. Verbal of peritemnô, to cut around and a privative. Both of these epithets are applied to the Jews in the O.T. (Ex 32:9; Ex 33:3, 5; Ex 34:9; Lev 26:41; Deut 9:6; Jer 6:10). Kardiais is locative plural like ôsin (ears), but some MSS. have genitive singular kardias (objective genitive). No epithet could have been more galling to these Pharisees than to be turned "uncircumcised in heart" (Rom 2:29). They had only the physical circumcision which was useless. Ye always (humeis aei). Emphatic position of humeis and "always" looks backward over the history of their forefathers which Stephen had reviewed. Resist (antiptete). Old word to fall against, to rush against. Only here in the N.T., but used in the O.T. which is here quoted (Num 27:14). Their fathers had made "external worship a substitute for spiritual obedience" (Furneaux). Stephen has shown how God had revealed himself gradually, the revelation sloping upward to Christ Jesus. "And as he saw his countrymen repeating the old mistake--clinging to the present and the material, while God was calling them to higher spiritual levels--and still, as ever, resisting the Holy Spirit, treating the Messiah as the patriarchs had treated Joseph, and the Hebrews Moses--the pity of it overwhelmed him, and his mingled grief and indignation broke out in words of fire, such as burned of old on the lips of the prophets" (Furneaux). Stephen, the accused, is now the accuser, and the situation becomes intolerable to the Sanhedrin.

Verse 52

Which of the prophets (tina tôn prophêtôn). Jesus (Luke 11:47; Mat 23:29-37) had charged them with this very thing. Cf. 2Ch 36:16. Which shewed before (prokatageilantas). The very prophets who foretold the coming of the Messiah their fathers killed. The coming (tês eleuseôs). Not in ancient Greek or LXX and only here in the N.T. (in a few late writers). Betrayers (prodotai). Just like Judas Iscariot. He hurled this old biting word at them. In the N.T. only here and Luke 6:16; 2Ti 3:4. It cut like a knife. It is blunter than Peter in Acts 3:13. Murderers (phoneis). The climax with this sharp word used of Barabbas (Acts 3:14).

Verse 53

Ye who (hoitines). The very ones who, quippe qui, often in Acts when the persons are enlarged upon (Acts 8:15; Acts 9:35; Acts 10:41, 47). As it was ordained by angels (eis diatagas aggelôn). About angels see on Acts 7:38. Diatagê (from diatassô, to arrange, appoint) occurs in late Greek, LXX, inscriptions, papyri, Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, pp. 89ff., and in N.T. only here and Rom 13:2. At (or as) the appointment of angels (cf. Mat 10:41; Mat 12:41 for this use of eis). And kept it not (kai ouk ephulaxate). Like a whipcracker these words cut to the quick. They gloried in possessing the law and openly violated it (Rom 2:23).

Verse 54

When they heard (akouontes). Present active participle of akouô, while hearing. They were cut to the heart (dieprionto tais kardiais). See Acts 5:33 where the same word and form (imperfect passive of diapriô) is used of the effect of Peter's speech on the Sadducees. Here Stephen had sent a saw through the hearts of the Pharisees that rasped them to the bone. They gnashed on him with their teeth (ebruchon tous odontas ep' auton). Imperfect (inchoative) active of bruchô (Attic brukô), to bite with loud noise, to grind or gnash the teeth. Literally, They began to gnash their teeth at (ep') him (just like a pack of hungry, snarling wolves). Stephen knew that it meant death for him.

Verse 55

And Jesus standing (kai Iêsoun hestôta). Full of the Holy Spirit, gazing steadfastly into heaven, he saw God's glory and Jesus "standing" as if he had risen to cheer the brave Stephen. Elsewhere (save verse Acts 7:56 also) he is pictured as sitting at the right hand of God (the Session of Christ) as in Mat 26:64; Mark 16:19; Acts 2:34; Eph 1:20; Col 3:1; Heb 1:3.

Verse 56

Opened (diênoigmenous). Perfect passive predicate participle of dianoignumi (cf. Mat 3:16; Luke 3:21). The son of man (ton huion tou anthrôpou). Elsewhere in the N.T. in Christ's own words. Here Stephen may refer to the words of Jesus as preserved in Mat 26:64.

Verse 57

Stopped their ears (suneschon ta ôta autôn). Second aorist active of sunechô, to hold together. They held their ears together with their hands and affected to believe Stephen guilty of blasphemy (cf. Mat 26:65). Rushed upon him with one accord (hômêsan homothumadon ep' auton). Ingressive aorist active indicative of hormaô, to rush impetuously as the hogs did down the cliff when the demons entered them (Luke 8:33). No vote was taken by the Sanhedrin. No scruple was raised about not having the right to put him to death (John 8:31). It may have taken place after Pilate's recall and before his successor came or Pilate, if there, just connived at such an incident that did not concern Rome. At any rate it was mob violence like modern lynching that took the law into the hands of the Sanhedrin without further formalities. Out of the city (ek tês poleôs). To keep from defiling the place with blood. But they sought to kill Paul as soon as they got him out of the temple area (Acts 21:30). Stoned (elithoboloun). Imperfect active indicative of lithoboleô, began to stone, from lithobolos (lithos, stone, ballô, to throw), late Greek verb, several times in the N.T. as Luke 13:34. Stoning was the Jewish punishment for blasphemy (Lev 24:14-16). The witnesses (hoi martures). The false testifiers against Stephen suborned by the Pharisees (Acts 6:11, 13). These witnesses had the privilege of casting the first stones (Deut 13:10; Deut 17:7) against the first witness for Christ with death (martyr in our modern sense of the word). At the feet of a young man named Saul (para tous podas neaniou kaloumenou Saulou). Beside (para) the feet. Our first introduction to the man who became the greatest of all followers of Jesus Christ. Evidently he was not one of the "witnesses" against Stephen, for he was throwing no stones at him. But evidently he was already a leader in the group of Pharisees. We know from later hints from Saul (Paul) himself that he had been a pupil of Gamaliel (Acts 22:3). Gamaliel, as the Pharisaic leader in the Sanhedrin, was probably on hand to hear the accusations against Stephen by the Pharisees. But, if so, he does not raise his voice against this mob violence. Saul does not seem to be aware that he is going contrary to the views of his master, though pupils often go further than their teachers.

Verse 59

They stoned (elithoboloun). Same verb and tense repeated, they kept on stoning, they kept it up as he was calling upon the Lord Jesus and making direct prayer to him as "Lord Jesus" (Kurie Iêsou). Receive my spirit (dexai to pneuma mou). Aorist middle imperative, urgency, receive it now. Many have followed Stephen into death with these words upon their dying lips. See, Acts 9:14, 21; Acts 22:16.

Verse 60

Kneeled down (theis ta gonata). Second aorist active participle of tithêmi, placing the knees (on the ground). This idiom is not in the old Greek for kneeling, but Luke has it five times (Luke 22:41; Acts 7:60; Acts 9:40; Acts 20:36; Acts 21:5) and Mark once (Acts 15:19). Jesus was standing at the right hand of God and Stephen knelt before him in worship and called on him in prayer. Lay not this sin to their charge (mê stêsêis autois tautên tèn hamartian). First aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive with mê, regular Greek idiom, Place not to them or against them (dative autois) this sin. The very spirit of Jesus towards his enemies as he died upon the Cross (Luke 23:34). He fell asleep (ekoimêthê). First aorist passive indicative of koimaô, to put to sleep. Old verb and the metaphor of sleep for death is common in all languages, but it is peculiarly appropriate here as Jesus used it of Lazarus. See also Acts 13:36; 1Co 15:18, etc. Our word cemetery (koimêtêrion) is the sleeping place of the dead. Knowling calls ekoimêthê here "a picture word of rest and calmness which stands in dramatic contrast to the rage and violence of the scene."

Verse 1

Was consenting (ên suneudokôn). Periphrastic imperfect of suneudokeô, a late double compound (sun, eu, dokeô) that well describes Saul's pleasure in the death (anairesis, taking off, only here in the N.T., though old word) of Stephen. For the verb see on Luke 23:32. Paul himself will later confess that he felt so (Acts 22:20), coolly applauding the murder of Stephen, a heinous sin (Rom 1:32). It is a gruesome picture. Chapter 7 should have ended here. On that day (en ekeinêi têi hêmerâi). On that definite day, that same day as in Acts 2:41. A great persecution (diôgmos megas). It was at first persecution from the Sadducees, but this attack on Stephen was from the Pharisees so that both parties are now united in a general persecution that deserves the adjective "great." See on Mat 13:21 for the old word diôgmos from diôkô, to chase, hunt, pursue, persecute. Were all scattered abroad (pantes diasparêsan). Second aorist passive indicative of diaspeirô, to scatter like grain, to disperse, old word, in the N.T. only in Acts 8:1, 4; Acts 11:19. Except the apostles (plên tôn apostolôn). Preposition plên (adverb from pleon, more) with the ablative often in Luke. It remains a bit of a puzzle why the Pharisees spared the apostles. Was it due to the advice of Gamaliel in Acts 5:34-40? Or was it the courage of the apostles? Or was it a combination of both with the popularity of the apostles in addition?

Verse 2

Devout (eulabeis). Only four times in the N.T. (Luke 2:25; Acts 2:5; Acts 8:2; Acts 22:12). Possibly some non-Christian Jews helped. The burial took place before the Christians were chiefly scattered. Buried (sunekomisan). Aorist active indicative of sunkomizô, old verb to bring together, to collect, to join with others in carrying, to bury (the whole funeral arrangements). Only here in the N.T. Lamentation (kopeton). Late word from koptomai, to beat the breast, in LXX, Plutarch, etc., only here in the N.T.

Laid waste (elumaineto). Imperfect middle of lumainomai, old verb (from lumê, injury), to dishonour, defile, devastate, ruin. Only here in the N.T. Like the laying waste of a vineyard by a wild boar (Ps 79:13). Picturesque description of the havoc carried on by Saul now the leader in the persecution. He is victor over Stephen now who had probably worsted him in debate in the Cilician synagogue in Jerusalem. Into every house (kata tous oikous). But Luke terms it "the church" (tên ekklêsian). Plainly not just an "assembly," but an organized body that was still "the church" when scattered in their own homes, "an unassembled assembly" according to the etymology. Words do not remain by the etymology, but travel on with usage. Haling (surôn). Literally, dragging forcibly (=hauling). Present active participle of surô, old verb. Men and women (andras kai gunaikas). A new feature of the persecution that includes the women. They met it bravely as through all the ages since (cf. Acts 9:2; Acts 22:4). This fact will be a bitter memory for Paul always. Committed (paredidou). Imperfect active of paradidômi, old verb, kept on handing them over to prison.

Verse 4

They therefore (hoi men oun). Demonstrative hoi as often (Acts 1:6, etc.) though it will make sense as the article with the participle diasparentes. The general statement is made here by men and a particular instance (de) follows in verse Acts 8:5. The inferential particle (oun) points back to verse Acts 8:3, the persecution by young Saul and the Pharisees. Jesus had commanded the disciples not to depart from Jerusalem till they received the Promise of the Father (Acts 1:4), but they had remained long after that and were not carrying the gospel to the other peoples (Acts 1:8). Now they were pushed out by Saul and began as a result to carry out the Great Commission for world conquest, that is those "scattered abroad" (diasparentes, second aorist passive participle of diaspeirô). This verb means disperse, to sow in separate or scattered places (dia) and so to drive people hither and thither. Old and very common verb, especially in the LXX, but in the N.T. only in Acts 8:1, 4; Acts 11:19. Went about (diêlthon). Constative second aorist active of dierchomai, to go through (from place to place, dia). Old and common verb, frequent for missionary journeys in the Acts (Acts 5:40; Acts 8:40; Acts 9:32; Acts 11:19; Acts 13:6). Preaching the word (euaggelizomenoi ton logon). Evangelizing or gospelizing the word (the truth about Christ). In Acts 11:19 Luke explains more fully the extent of the labours of these new preachers of the gospel. They were emergency preachers, not ordained clergymen, but men stirred to activity by the zeal of Saul against them. The blood of the martyrs (Stephen) was already becoming the seed of the church. "The violent dispersion of these earnest disciples resulted in a rapid diffusion of the gospel" (Alvah Hovey).

Verse 5

Philip (Philippos). The deacon (Acts 6:5) and evangelist (Acts 21:8), not the apostle of the same name (Mark 3:18). To the city of Samaria (eis tēn polin tēs Samarias). Genitive of apposition. Samaria is the name of the city here. This is the first instance cited of the expansion noted in verse Acts 8:4. Jesus had an early and fruitful ministry in Samaria (John 4:1-42), though the twelve were forbidden to go into a Samaritan city during the third tour of Galilee (Mat 10:5), a temporary prohibition withdrawn before Jesus ascended on high (Acts 1:8). Proclaimed (ekêrussen). Imperfect active, began to preach and kept on at it. Note euaggelizomenoi in verse Acts 8:4 of missionaries of good news (Page) while ekêrussen here presents the preacher as a herald. He is also a teacher (didaskalos) like Jesus. Luke probably obtained valuable information from Philip and his daughters about these early days when in his home in Caesarea (Acts 21:8).

Verse 6

Gave heed (proseichon). Imperfect active as in verses Acts 8:10, 11, there with dative of the person (autōi), here with the dative of the thing (tois legomenois). There is an ellipse of noun (mind). They kept on giving heed or holding the mind on the things said by Philip, spell-bound, in a word. When they heard (en tōi akouein autous). Favourite Lukan idiom, en and the locative case of the articular infinitive with the accusative of general reference "in the hearing as to them." Which he did (ha epoiei). Imperfect active again, which he kept on doing from time to time. Philip wrought real miracles which upset the schemes of Simon Magus.

Verse 7

For many (polloi gar). So the correct text of the best MSS., but there is an anacoluthon as this nominative has no verb with it. It was "the unclean spirits" that "came out" (exêrchonto, imperfect middle). The margin of the Revised Version has it "came forth," as if they came out of a house, a rather strained translation. The loud outcry is like the demons cast out by Jesus (Mark 3:11; Luke 4:41). Palsied (paralelumenoi, perfect passive participle). Luke's usual word, loosened at the side, with no power over the muscles. Furneaux notes that "the servant was reaping where the Master had sown. Samaria was the mission field white for the harvest (John 4:35)." The Samaritans who had been bewitched by Simon are now carried away by Philip.

Verse 9

Simon (Simôn). One of the common names (Josephus, Ant. XX. 7, 2) and a number of messianic pretenders had this name. A large number of traditions in the second and third centuries gathered round this man and Baur actually proposed that the Simon of the Clementine Homilies is really the apostle Paul though Paul triumphed over the powers of magic repeatedly (Acts 13:6-12; Acts 19:11-19), "a perfect absurdity" (Spitta, Apostelgeschichte, p. 149). One of the legends is that this Simon Magus of Acts is the father of heresy and went to Rome and was worshipped as a god (so Justin Martyr). But a stone found in the Tiber A.D. 1574 has an inscription to Semoni Sanco Deo Fidio Sacrum which is (Page) clearly to Hercules, Sancus being a Sabine name for Hercules. This Simon in Samaria is simply one of the many magicians of the time before the later gnosticism had gained a foothold. "In his person Christianity was for the first time confronted with superstition and religious imposture, of which the ancient world was at this period full" (Furneaux). Which beforetime used sorcery (proupêrchen mageuôn). An ancient idiom (periphrastic), the present active participle mageuôn with the imperfect active verb from prouparchô, the idiom only here and Luke 23:12 in the N.T. Literally "Simon was existing previously practising magic." This old verb mageuô is from magos (a magus, seer, prophet, false prophet, sorcerer) and occurs here alone in the N.T. Amazed (existan"n). Present active participle of the verb existanô, later form of existêmi, to throw out of position, displace, upset, astonish, chiefly in the Gospels in the N.T. Same construction as mageuôn. Some great one (tina megan). Predicate accusative of general reference (infinitive in indirect discourse). It is amazing how gullible people are in the presence of a manifest impostor like Simon. The Magi were the priestly order in the Median and Persian empires and were supposed to have been founded by Zoroaster. The word magoi (magi) has a good sense in Mat 2:1, but here and in Acts 13:6 it has the bad sense like our "magic."

Verse 10

That power of God which is called Great (hê Dunamis tou theou hê kaloumenê Megalê). Apparently here already the oriental doctrine of emanations or aeons so rampant in the second century. This "power" was considered a spark of God himself and Jerome (in Mat 24:1) quotes Simon (Page) as saying: Ego sum sermo Dei, ... ego omnipotens, ego omnia Dei. Simon claimed to impersonate God.

Verse 11

Because that of long time he had amazed them with his sorceries (dia to hikanôï chronôï tais magiais exestakenai autous). Causal use of dia with the accusative articular infinitive (perfect active Koin, form and transitive, exestakenai). Same verb as in verse Acts 8:9 participle existanôn and in verse Acts 8:13 imperfect passive existato (cf. also Acts 2:7 already). Chronôï is associative instrumental and magiais instrumental case.

Verse 12

They were baptized (ebaptizonto). Imperfect passive (repetition, from time to time), while believed (episteusan) is constative aorist antecedent to the baptism. Note dative case of Philip with episteusan. Note the gospel of Philip "concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ."

Verse 13

And Simon also himself believed (Ho de Simôn kai autos episteusen). Note the same verb in the aorist tense episteusen. What did he believe? Evidently that Jesus was this "power of God" not himself (Simon). He saw that the miracles wrought by Philip in the name of Christ were genuine while he knew that his own were frauds. He wanted this power that Philip had to add to his own pretensions. "He was probably half victim of self-delusion, half conscious impostor" (Furneaux). He was determined to get this new "power," but had no sense of personal need of Jesus as Saviour for his sins. So he submitted to baptism (baptistheis, first aorist passive participle of baptizô), clear proof that baptism does not convey salvation. He continued with Philip (ên proskarterôn tôi Philippôi). Periphrastic imperfect of the verb proskartereô (see on Acts 2:46). He stuck to Philip (dative case) to find out the secret of his power. Beholding (theôrôn). Watching the signs and miracles (powers, dunameis that threw his "power" in the shade) as they were wrought (ginomenas, present middle participle of ginomai). The more he watched the more the wonder grew (existato). He had "amazed" (verse Acts 8:9) the people by his tricks and he was himself more "amazed" than they by Philip's deeds.

Verse 14

That Samaria had received (hoti dedektai hê Samaria). The district here, not the city as in verse Acts 8:5. Perfect middle indicative of dechomai retained in indirect discourse. It was a major event for the apostles for now the gospel was going into Samaria as Jesus had predicted (Acts 1:8). Though the Samaritans were nominally Jews, they were not held so by the people. The sending of Peter and John was no reflection on Philip, but was an appropriate mission since "many Christian Jews would be scandalized by the admission of Samaritans" (Furneaux). If Peter and John sanctioned it, the situation would be improved. John had once wanted to call down fire from heaven on a Samaritan village (Luke 9:54).

Verse 15

That they might receive (hopôs labôsin). Second aorist active subjunctive of labanô, final clause with hopôs. Did they wish the Samaritan Pentecost to prove beyond a doubt that the Samaritans were really converted when they believed? They had been baptized on the assumption that the Holy Spirit had given them new hearts. The coming of the Holy Spirit with obvious signs (cf. Acts 10:44-48) as in Jerusalem would make it plain.

Verse 16

He was fallen (ên epipeptôkos). Periphrastic past perfect active of epiptô, old verb. The participle is neuter here because of the grammatical gender of pneuma, but the translation should be "he" (natural gender), not "it." We should not use "it" for the Holy Spirit. Only they had been baptized (monon de babaptismenoi hupêrchon). Periphrastic past perfect passive of baptizô with huparchô (see verse Acts 8:9 proupêrchon), instead of êsan. Into the name (eis to onoma). Better, in the name (see on Acts 2:38).

Verse 17

Laid they their hands (epetithesan tas cheiras). Imperfect active, repetition. The laying on of hands did not occur at the great Pentecost (Acts 2:4, 33) nor in Acts 4:31; Acts 10:44 nor is it mentioned in 1Co 12; 1Co 14. It is mentioned in Acts 6:7 about the deacons and in Acts 13:3 when Barnabas and Saul left Antioch. And in Saul's case it was Ananias who laid his hands on him (Acts 9:17). Hence it cannot be concluded that the Holy Spirit was received only by the laying on of the hands of the apostles or by the hands of anyone. The so-called practice of "confirmation" appeals to this passage, but inconclusively. They received (elambanon). Imperfect active, repetition as before and pari passu with the laying on of the hands.

Verse 18

When Simon saw (Idôn de ho Simôn). This participle (second aorist active of horaô) shows plainly that those who received the gift of the Holy Spirit spoke with tongues. Simon now saw power transferred to others. Hence he was determined to get this new power. He offered them money (prosênegken chrêmata). Second aorist active indicative of prosphêrô. He took Peter to be like himself, a mountebank performer who would sell his tricks for enough money. Trafficking in things sacred like ecclesiastical preferments in England is called "Simony" because of this offer of Simon.

Verse 19

Me also (kamoi). This is the whole point with this charlatan. He wants the power to pass on "this power." His notion of "The Holy Spirit" was on this low level. He regarded spiritual functions as a marketable commodity. Money "can buy diamonds, but not wisdom, or sympathy, or faith, or holiness" (Furneaux).

Verse 20

Perish with thee (sun soi eiê eis apôleian). Literally, Be with thee for destruction. Optative for a future wish. The use of eis with the accusative in the predicate is especially common in the LXX. The wish reveals Peter's indignation at the base offer of Simon. Peter was no grafter to accept money for spiritual power. He spurned the temptation. The natural meaning of Peter's language is that Simon was on the road to destruction. It is a warning and almost a curse on him, though verse Acts 8:22 shows that there was still room for repentance. To obtain (ktâsthai). To acquire. Usual meaning of the present tense (infinitive middle) of ptaomai.

Verse 21

Lot (klêros). Same idea as "part" (meris), only as a figure. Matter (logoi). Literally, word or subject (as in Luke 1:4; Acts 15:6), the power of communicating the Holy Spirit. This use of logos is in the ancient Greek. Straight (eutheia). Quotation from Ps 78:37. Originally a mathematically straight line as in Acts 9:11, then moral rectitude as here.

Verse 22

Wickedness (kakias). Only here in Luke's writings, though old word and in LXX (cf. 1Pe 2:1, 16). If perhaps (ei ara). Si forte. This idiom, though with the future indicative and so a condition of the first class (determined as fulfilled), yet minimizes the chance of forgiveness as in Mark 11:13. Peter may have thought that his sin was close to the unpardonable sin (Mat 12:31), but he does not close the door of hope. The thought (hê epinoia). Old Greek word from epinoeô, to think upon, and so purpose. Only here in the N.T.

Verse 23

That thou art (se onta). Participle in indirect discourse after horô (I see). In the gall of bitterness (eis cholên pikrias). Old word from cholas either from cheô, to pour, or chloê, yellowish green, bile or gall. In the N.T. only in Mat 27:34 and here. In LXX in sense of wormwood as well as bile. See Deut 29:18; Deut 32:32; Lam 3:15; Job 16:14. "Gall and bitterness" in Deut 29:18. Here the gall is described by the genitive pikrias as consisting in "bitterness." In Heb 12:15 "a root of bitterness," a bitter root. This word pikria in the N.T. only here and Heb 12:15; Rom 3:14; Eph 4:31. The "bond of iniquity" (sundesmon adikias) is from Isa 58:6. Paul uses this word of peace (Eph 4:3), of love (Col 3:14), of the body (Col 2:19). Peter describes Simon's offer as poison and a chain.

Verse 24

Pray ye for me (Deêthête humeis huper emou). Emphasis on humeis (you). First aorist passive imperative. Simon is thoroughly frightened by Peter's words, but shows no sign of personal repentance or change of heart. He wants to escape the penalty for his sin and hopes that Peter can avert it. Peter had clearly diagnosed his case. He was an unconverted man in spite of his profession of faith and baptism. There is no evidence that he ever changed his life at all. Which (hôn). Genitive by attraction of the accusative relative ha to case of the unexpressed antecedent toutôn (of those things), a common Greek idiom.

Verse 25

They therefore (hoi men oun). Demonstrative hoi with men (no following de) and the inferential oun (therefore) as often in Acts (Acts 1:6, etc.). Returned (hupestrephon). Imperfect active picturing the joyful journey of preaching (euêggelizonto, imperfect middle) to the Samaritan villages. Peter and John now carried on the work of Philip to the Samaritans. This issue was closed.

Verse 26

Toward the South (kata mesêmbrian). Old word from mesos and hêméra, midday or noon as in Acts 22:16, the only other example in the N.T. That may be the idea here also, though "towards the South" gets support from the use of kata liba in Acts 27:12. The same is desert (hautê estin erêmos). Probably a parenthetical remark by Luke to give an idea of the way. One of the ways actually goes through a desert. Gaza itself was a strong city that resisted Alexander the Great five months. It was destroyed by the Romans after war broke out with the Jews.

Verse 27

A eunuch of great authority (eunouchos dunastês). Eunuchs were often employed by oriental rulers in high posts. Dynasty comes from this old word dunastês used of princes in Luke 1:52 and of God in 1Ti 6:15. Eunuchs were not allowed to be Jews in the full sense (Deut 23:1), but only proselytes of the gate. But Christianity is spreading to Samaritans and to eunuchs. Candace (Kandakês). Not a personal name, but like Pharaoh and Ptolemy, the title of the queens of Ethiopia. This eunuch apparently brought the gospel to Ethiopia. Treasure (gazês). Persian word, common in late Greek and Latin for the royal treasure, here only in the N.T. For to worship (proskunêsôn). Future active participle expressing purpose, a common idiom in the ancient Greek, but rare in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1128).

Verse 28

Was reading (aneginôskên). Imperfect active descriptive, not periphrastic like the two preceding verbs (was returning and sitting). He was reading aloud as Philip "heard him reading" (êkousen auton anaginôskontos), a common practice among orientals. He had probably purchased this roll of Isaiah in Jerusalem and was reading the LXX Greek text. See imperfect again in verse Acts 8:32.

Verse 29

Join thyself (kollêthêti). See this vivid word (be glued to, first aorist passive imperative) already in Acts 5:13; Luke 10:11; Luke 15:15. Philip probably jumped on the running board on the side of the chariot.

Verse 30

Understandest thou what thou readest? (Ara ge ginôskeis ha anaginôskeis?) The interrogative particle ara and the intensive particle ge indicate doubt on Philip's part. The play (paranomasia) upon the words in the Greek is very neat: Do you know what you know again (read)? The verb for read (anaginôsko) means to know the letters again, recognize, read. The famous comment of Julian about the Christian writings is often quoted: Anegnôn, egnôn, kategnôn (I read, I understood, I condemned). The keen retort was: Anegnôs, all'ouk egnôs, ei gar egnôs, ouk an kategnôs (You read, but did not understand; for if you had understood, you would not have condemned).

Verse 31

How can I, except some one shall guide me? (Pôs gar an dunaimên ean me tis hodêgêsei me?). This is a mixed condition, the conclusion coming first belongs to the fourth class (undetermined with less likelihood of being determined) with an and the optative, but the condition (ean, instead of the usual ei, and the future indicative) is of the first class (determined or fulfilled. Robertson, Grammar, p. 1022), a common enough phenomenon in the Koin.. The eunuch felt the need of some one to guide (hodêgeô from hodêgos, guide, and that from hodos, way, and hegeomai, to lead).

Verse 32

The place (he periochê). See the verb periechei so used in 1Pe 2:6. The word is used either of the section as in Codex A before the beginning of Mark or the contents of a passage. He was here reading one particular passage (Isa 53:7). The quotation is from the LXX which has some variations from the Hebrew.

Verse 33

Was taken away (êrthê). First aorist passive indicative of airô, to take away. It is not clear what the meaning is here either in the Hebrew or the LXX. Knowling suggests that the idea is that justice was withheld, done away with, in his death, as it certainly was in the death of Christ.

Verse 34

Of whom (peri tinos). Concerning whom, a pertinent inquiry surely and one that troubles many critics today.

Verse 35

Beginning from this scripture (arxamenos apo tês graphês tautês). As a text. Philip needed no better opening than this Messianic passage in Isaiah. Preached unto him Jesus (euêggelisato autôi ton Iêsoun). Philip had no doubt about the Messianic meaning and he knew that Jesus was the Messiah. There are scholars who do not find Jesus in the Old Testament at all, but Jesus himself did (Luke 24:27) as Philip does here. Scientific study of the Old Testament (historical research) misses its mark if it fails to find Christ the Center of all history. The knowledge of the individual prophet is not always clear, but after events throw a backward light that illumines it all (1Pe 1:11; 2Pe 1:19-21).

Verse 36

What doth hinder me to be baptized? (Ti kôluei me baptisthênai?). Evidently Philip had said something about baptism following faith and conversion. Verse Acts 8:37 is not a genuine part of Acts, a western addition. Later baptismal liturgies had it.

Verse 39

Out of the water (ek tou hudatos). Not from the edge of the water, but up out of the water as in Mark 1:10. Caught away (hêrpassen). Suddenly and miraculously, for harpazô, like the Latin rapio, means to carry off. Cf. 2Co 12:2; 1Th 4:17. Went on his way (eporeueto). Kept on going, imperfect active.

Verse 40

He preached the gospel (euêggelizeto). Imperfect middle describing the evangelistic tour of Philip "till he came to Caesarea" (heôs tou elthein auton, genitive articular infinitive with the preposition heôs and the accusative of general reference) where he made his home and headquarters thereafter (Acts 21:28) and was known as the Evangelist.

Yet (eti). As if some time elapsed between the death of Stephen as is naturally implied by the progressive persecution described in Acts 8:3. The zeal of Saul the persecutor increased with success. Breathing threatening and slaughter (enpneôn apeilês kai phonou). Present active participle of old and common verb. Not "breathing out," but "breathing in" (inhaling) as in Aeschylus and Plato or "breathing on" (from Homer on). The partitive genitive of apeilês and phonou means that threatening and slaughter had come to be the very breath that Saul breathed, like a warhorse who sniffed the smell of battle. He breathed on the remaining disciples the murder that he had already breathed in from the death of the others. He exhaled what he inhaled. Jacob had said that "Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf" (Gen 49:27). This greatest son of Benjamin was fulfilling this prophecy (Furneaux). The taste of blood in the death of Stephen was pleasing to young Saul (Acts 8:1) and now he revelled in the slaughter of the saints both men and women. In Acts 26:11 Luke quotes Paul as saying that he was "exceedingly mad against them."

Verse 2

Asked (êitêsato). First aorist middle indicative, the indirect middle, asked for himself (as a favour to himself). Felten notes that "Saul as a Pharisee makes request of a Sadducee" (the high priest) either Caiaphas if before A.D. 35, but if in 36 Jonathan, son of Caiaphas or if in 37 Theophilus, another son of Caiaphas. Letters (epistolâs).

Julius Ceasar and Augustus had granted the high priest and Sanhedrin jurisdiction over Jews in foreign cities, but this central ecclesiastical authority was not always recognized in every local community outside of Judea. Paul says that he received his authority to go to Damascus from the priests (Acts 26:10) and "the estate of the elders" (Acts 22:5), that is the Sanhedrin. To Damascus (eis Damaskon). As if no disciples of importance (outside the apostles in Jerusalem) were left in Judea. Damascus at this time may have been under the rule of Aretas of Arabia (tributary to Rome) as it certainly was a couple of years later when Saul escaped in a basket (2Co 11:32). This old city is the most enduring in the history of the world (Knowling). It is some 150 miles Northeast from Jerusalem and watered by the river Abana from Anti-Lebanon. Here the Jews were strong in numbers (10,000 butchered by Nero later) and here some disciples had found refuge from Saul's persecution in Judea and still worshipped in the synagogues. Paul's language in Acts 26:11 seems to mean that Damascus is merely one of other "foreign cities" to which he carried the persecution. If he found (ean heurêi). Third class condition with aorist subjunctive retained after secondary tense (asked). The Way (tês hodou). A common method in the Acts for describing Christianity as the Way of life, absolutely as also in Acts 19:9, 23; Acts 22:4; Acts 24:14, 22 or the way of salvation (Acts 16:17) or the way of the Lord (Acts 18:25). It is a Jewish definition of life as in Isa 40:3 "the way of the Lord," Ps 1:6 "the way of the righteous," "the way of the wicked." Jesus called himself "the way" (John 14:6), the only way to the Father. The so-called Epistle of Barnabas presents the Two Ways. The North American Indians call Christianity the Jesus Road. That he might bring them bound (hopôs dedemenous agagêi). Final clause with hopôs (less common than hina) and aorist (effective) subjunctive (agagêi, reduplicated aorist of agô, common verb) and perfect passive participle (dedemenous) of deô, in a state of sheer helplessness like his other victims both men and women. Three times (Acts 8:3; Acts 9:2; Acts 22:4) this fact of persecuting women is mentioned as a special blot in Paul's cruelty (the third time by Paul himself) and one of the items in his being chief of sinners (1Ti 1:15).

As he journeyed (en tōi poreuesthai). Luke's common idiom for a temporal clause (in the journeying), en with the locative articular middle infinitive. Drew nigh (eggizein). Present active infinitive, was drawing nigh. Shone round about him (auton periêstrapsen). First aorist (ingressive) active indicative of periastraptō, late compound verb common in LXX and Byzantine writers, here and Acts 22:6 alone in the N.T. "A light from heaven suddenly flashed around him." It was like a flash of lightning. Paul uses the same verb in Acts 22:5, but in Acts 26:13 he employs perilampsan (shining around). There are numerous variations in the historical narrative of Saul's conversion in Acts 9:3-18 and Luke's report of Paul's two addresses, one on the steps of the Tower of Antonia facing the murderous mob (Acts 22:6-16), the other before Festus and Agrippa (Acts 26:12-20). A great deal of capital has been made of these variations to the discredit of Luke as a writer as if he should have made Paul's two speeches conform at every point with his own narrative. This objection has no weight except for those who hold that Luke composed Paul's speeches freely as some Greek writers used to do. But, if Luke had notes of Paul's speeches or help from Paul himself, he naturally preserved the form of the two addresses without trying to make them agree with each other in all details or with his own narrative in chapter 9. Luke evidently attached great importance to the story of Saul's conversion as the turning point not simply in the career of the man, but an epoch in the history of apostolic Christianity. In broad outline and in all essentials the three accounts agree and testify to the truthfulness of the account of the conversion of Saul. It is impossible to overestimate the worth to the student of Christianity of this event from every angle because we have in Paul's Epistles his own emphasis on the actual appearance of Jesus to him as the fact that changed his whole life (1Co 15:8; Gal 1:16). The variations that appear in the three accounts do not mar the story, when rightly understood, as we shall see. Here, for instance, Luke simply mentions "a light from heaven," while in Acts 22:6 Paul calls it "a great (hikanon) light" "about noon" and in Acts 26:13 "above the brightness of the sun," as it would have to be "at midday" with the sun shining.

Verse 4

He fell upon the earth (pesôn epi tèn gên). Second aorist active participle. So in Acts 22:7 Paul says: "I fell unto the ground" (epesa eis to edaphos) using an old word rather than the common gên. In Acts 26:14 Paul states that "we were all fallen to the earth" (pantôn katapesontôn hêmôn eis tèn gên, genitive absolute construction). But here in verse Acts 9:7 "the men that journeyed with him stood speechless" (histêkeisan eneoî). But surely the points of time are different. In Acts 26:14 Paul refers to the first appearance of the vision when all fell to the earth. Here in verse Acts 9:7 Luke refers to what occurred after the vision when both Saul and the men had risen from the ground. Saul, Saul (Saoul, Saoul). The Hebrew form occurs also in Acts 22:7; Acts 26:14 where it is expressly stated that the voice was in the Hebrew (Aramaic) tongue as also in Acts 9:17 (Ananias). Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 316) terms this use of Saoul "the historian's sense of liturgical rhythm." For the repetition of names by Jesus note Luke 10:41 (Martha, Martha), Luke 22:31 (Simon, Simon). Me (me). In persecuting the disciples, Saul was persecuting Jesus, as the words of Jesus in verse Acts 9:5 made plain. Christ had already spoken of the mystic union between himself and his followers (Mat 10:40; Mat 25:40, 45; John 15:1-5). The proverb (Pindar) that Jesus quotes to Saul about kicking against the goad is genuine in Acts 26:14, but not here.

Verse 5

Lord (kurie). It is open to question if kurie should not here be translated "Sir" as in Acts 16:30 and in Mat 21:29, 30; John 5:7; John 12:21; John 20:15; and should be so in John 9:36. It is hardly likely that at this stage Saul recognized Jesus as Lord, though he does so greet him in Acts 22:10 "What shall I do, Lord?" Saul may have recognized the vision as from God as Cornelius says "Lord" in Acts 10:4. Saul surrendered instantly as Thomas did (John 20:28) and as little Samuel (1Sa 3:9). This surrender of the will to Christ was the conversion of Saul. He saw a real Person, the Risen Christ, to whom he surrendered his life. On this point he never wavered for a moment to the end.

Verse 6

The best MSS. do not have "trembling and astonished," and "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" The Textus Receptus put these words in here without the authority of a Greek codex. See Acts 22:10 above for the genuine text. It shall be told thee (lalêthêsetai). Future passive indicative of laleô. It is hardly likely that Luke records all that Jesus said to Saul, but more was to come on his arrival in Damascus. Saul had received all that he could bear just now (John 16:12). What (hoti). Rare in Koin, use of this indefinite neuter relative in an indirect question, the only example in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 731). Human agents like Ananias can finish what Jesus by supernatural manifestation has here begun in Saul.

Verse 7

That journeyed with him (hoi sunodeuontes autôi). Not in the older Greek, but in the Koin, with the associative instrumental. Speechless (eneoi). Mute. Only here in N.T., though old word. Hearing the voice, but beholding no man (akouontes men tês phônês, mêdena de theôrountes). Two present active participles in contrast (men, de). In Acts 22:9 Paul says that the men "beheld the light" (to men phôs etheasantō), but evidently did not discern the person. Paul also says there, "but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me" (tên de phônên ouk êkousan tou lalountos moi). Instead of this being a flat contradiction of what Luke says in Acts 9:7 it is natural to take it as being likewise (as with the "light" and "no one") a distinction between the "sound" (original sense of phônê as in John 3:8) and the separate words spoken. It so happens that akouô is used either with the accusative (the extent of the hearing) or the genitive (the specifying). It is possible that such a distinction here coincides with the two senses of phônê. They heard the sound (Acts 9:7), but did not understand the words (Acts 22:9). However, this distinction in case with akouô, though possible and even probable here, is by no means a necessary one for in John 3:8 where phônên undoubtedly means "sound" the accusative occurs as Luke uses êkousen phônên about Saul in Acts 9:4. Besides in Acts 22:7 Paul uses êkousa phônês about himself, but êkousa phônên about himself in Acts 26:14, interchangeably.

Verse 8

He saw nothing (ouden eblepen). Imperfect active indicative, was seeing nothing. "The glory of that light" (Acts 22:11) when he saw Jesus had blinded his eyes now wide open (aneôigmenôn, perfect passive participle of anoigô with double reduplication). The blindness was proof that something had happened to him and that it was no hallucination that he had seen the Risen Christ. Saul arose after the others were on their feet. They led him by the hand (cheiragôgountes). From cheiragôgos (cheir, hand and agô, to lead). Only here in the N.T., but in LXX and late writers though not in the old Greek. It was a pathetic picture to see the masterful Saul, victorious persecutor and conqueror of the disciples, now helpless as a child.

Verse 9

Not seeing (mê blepôn). The usual negative mê of the participle. It was a crisis for Saul, this sudden blindness for three days (hêmeras treis, accusative of extent of time). Later (Gal 4:15) Paul has an affection of the eyes which may have been caused by this experience on the road to Damascus or at least his eyes may have been predisposed by it to weakness in the glare of the Syrian sun in the land where today so much eye trouble exists. He neither ate nor drank anything, for his appetite had gone as often happens in a crisis of the soul. These must have been days of terrible stress and strain.

Verse 10

Ananias (*Hanania*s). Name common enough (cf. Acts 5:1 for another Ananias) and means "Jehovah is gracious." Nomen et omen (Knowling). This Ananias had the respect of both Jews and Christians in Damascus (Acts 22:12). In a vision (en horamati). Zeller and others scout the idea of the historicity of this vision as supernatural. Even Furneaux holds that "it is a characteristic of the Jewish Christian sources to point out the Providential ordering of events by the literary device of a vision," as "in the early chapters of Matthew's and Luke's Gospels." He is content with this "beautiful expression of the belief" with no interest in the actual facts. But that is plain illusion, not to say delusion, and makes both Paul and Luke deceived by the story of Ananias (Acts 9:10-18; Acts 22:12-16, 26). One MS. of the old Latin Version does omit the vision to Ananias and that is basis enough for those who deny the supernatural aspects of Christianity.

Verse 11

To the street (epi tēn rhumēn). See on Luke 14:21. A run way (from rheō, to run) between the houses. So were the narrow lanes or alleys called streets and finally in later Greek the word is applied to streets even when broad. Straight (eutheian). Most of the city lanes were crooked like the streets of Boston (old cow-paths, people say), but this one still runs "in a direct line from the eastern to the western gate of the city" (Vincent). Since the ancients usually rebuilt on the same sites, it is probable that the line of the street of that name today is the same, though the actual level has been much raised. Hence the identification of the house of Ananias and the house of Judas are very precarious.

Verse 12

Coming in and laying (eiselthonta kai epithenta). Second aorist (ingressive) active participles picturing the punctiliar act as a sort of indirect discourse after verbs of sensation (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1040-2). Some ancient documents do not have "in a vision" here. Receive his sight (anablepsei). First aorist active subjunctive with hopôs (purpose). See again as in Acts 9:17.

Verse 13

How much evil (hosa kaka). How many evil things. Saul's reputation (Acts 26:10) as a persecutor had preceded him. To thy saints (tois hagiois). Dative of disadvantage. "Used here for the first time as a name for the Christians" (Knowling), but it came to be the common and normal (Hackett) term for followers of Christ (Acts 9:32, 41; Acts 26:10; 1Co 1:2, etc.). This common word is from to hagos, religious awe or reverence and is applied to God's name (Luke 1:49), God's temple (Mat 24:15), God's people as set apart for God (Luke 1:70; Luke 2:23; Rom 1:7, etc.). Ananias in his ignorance saw in Saul only the man with an evil reputation while Jesus saw in Saul the man transformed by grace to be a messenger of mercy.

Verse 14

Hath authority (echei exousian). Probably Ananias had received letters from the Christians left in Jerusalem warning him of the coming of Saul. The protest of Ananias to Jesus against any dealing with Saul is a fine illustration of our own narrow ignorance in our rebellious moods against the will of God.

Verse 15

A chosen vessel (skeuos eklogês). A vessel of choice or selection. The genitive of quality is common in the Hebrew, as in the vernacular Koin,. Jesus chose Saul before Saul chose Jesus. He felt of himself that he was an earthen vessel (2Co 4:7) unworthy of so great a treasure. It was a great message that Ananias had to bear to Saul. He told it in his own way (Acts 9:17; Acts 22:14) and in Acts 26:16 Paul blends the message of Jesus to Ananias with that to him as one. Before the Gentiles (enôpion tôn ethnôn). This was the chief element in the call of Saul. He was to be an apostle to the Gentiles (Eph 3:6-12).

Verse 16

I will shew (hupodeixô). Beforehand as a warning as in Luke 3:7 and from time to time. He must suffer (dei auton pathein). Constatative aorist active infinitive (pathein, from paschô) covering the whole career of Saul. Suffering is one element in the call that Saul receives. He will learn "how many things" (hosa) are included in this list by degrees and by experience. A glance at 2Co 10-12 will show one the fulfilment of this prophecy. But it was the "gift" of Christ to Paul to go on suffering (paschein, present infinitive, Php 1:29).

Verse 17

Laying his hands on him (epitheis ep' auton tas cheiras). As in the vision Saul saw (verse Acts 9:12). Brother Saul (Saoul adelphe). All suspicion has vanished and Ananias takes Saul to his heart as a brother in Christ. It was a gracious word to Saul now under suspicion on both sides. The Lord, even Jesus (ho kurios, Iêsous). Undoubted use of kurios as Lord and applied to Jesus. Who appeared (ho ophtheis). First aorist passive participle of horaô, was seen as in Acts 26:16 and with the dative also (soi). Thou camest (êrchou). Imperfect indicative middle, "thou wert coming." Be filled with the Holy Spirit (plêstheis pneumatos hagiou). This enduement of special power he will need as an apostle (Hackett) and as promised by Jesus (Acts 1:8; Gal 2:7).

Verse 18

Fell off (apepesan). Second aorist active indicative (note--an ending like first aorist) of apopiptô, old verb, but here alone in the N.T. As if it were scales (hôs lepidés). Chiefly late word (LXX) from lepô, to peel, and only here in the N.T. See Tobit 11:13, "The white film peeled from his eyes" (elepisthê). Luke does not say that actual "scales" fell from the eyes of Saul, but that it felt that way to him as his sight returned, "as if" (hôs). Medical writers use the word lepis for pieces of the skin that fall off (Hobart, Medical Language of St. Luke, p. 39). Luke may have heard Paul tell of this vivid experience. Was baptized (ebaptisthê). First aorist passive indicative. Apparently by Ananias (Acts 22:16) as a symbol of the new life in Christ already begun, possibly in the pool in the house of Judas as today water is plentiful in Damascus or in Abana or Pharpar (Furneaux), better than all the waters of Israel according to Naaman (2Ki 5:12).

Verse 19

Was strengthened (enischuthê). First aorist passive indicative of enischuô, to receive strength (ischus), comparatively late verb and here only in the N.T. save Luke 22:43 where it is doubtful. Poor verse division. This clause belongs in sense to verse Acts 9:18. Some days (hêmeras tinas). An indefinite period, probably not long,

Verse 20

He proclaimed Jesus (ekêrussen ton Iêsoun). Imperfect indicative, inchoative, began to preach. Jesus, not Christ, is the correct text here. He did this first preaching in the Jewish synagogues, a habit of his life when possible, and following the example of Jesus. That he is the Son of God (hoti houtos estin ho huios tou theou). This is Paul's platform as a Christian preacher, one that he always occupied to the very end. It was a complete reversal of his previous position. Jesus had turned him completely around. It is the conclusion that Saul now drew from the vision of the Risen Christ and the message through Ananias. By "the Son of God" Saul means the Messiah of promise and hope, the Messianic sense of the Baptist (John 1:34) and of Nathanael (John 1:49) for Saul is now proclaiming his faith in Jesus in the very synagogues where he had meant to arrest those who professed their faith in him. Peter laid emphasis on the Resurrection of Jesus as a glorious fact and proclaimed Jesus as Lord and Christ. Paul boldly calls Jesus the Son of God with full acknowledgment of his deity from the very start. Thomas had come to this place slowly (John 20:28). Saul begins with this truth and never leaves it. With this faith he can shake the world. There is no power in any other preaching.

Verse 21

Were amazed (existanto). Imperfect middle indicative of existêmi. They continued to stand out of themselves in astonishment at this violent reversal in Saul the persecutor. Made havock (porthêsas). First aorist active participle of portheô, to lay waste, an old verb, but only here and Gal 1:13, 23 by Paul, an interesting coincidence. It is the old proverb about Saul among the prophets (1Sa 10:12) revived with a new meaning (Furneaux). Had come (elêluthêi). Past perfect indicative active. Might bring (agagêi). Second aorist (effective) active subjunctive of agô with hina (purpose). Bound (dedemenous). Perfect passive participle of deô. Interesting tenses.

Verse 22

Increased the more (mállon enedunamouto). Imperfect passive indicative of endunamoô, to receive power (late verb), progressive increase in strength as opposition grew. Saul's recantation stirred controversy and Saul grew in power. See also Paul in Php 4:13; 1Ti 1:12; 2Ti 2:1; 2Ti 4:17; Rom 4:20. Christ, the dynamo of spiritual energy, was now pouring power (Acts 1:8) into Paul who is already filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts 9:17). Confounded (sunechunnen). Imperfect active indicative of sunchunnô (late form of suncheô, to pour together, commingle, make confusion. The more Saul preached, the more the Jews were confused. Proving (sunbibazôn). Present active participle of sunbibazô, old verb to make go together, to coalesce, to knit together. It is the very word that Luke will use in Acts 16:10 of the conclusion reached at Troas concerning the vision of Paul. Here Saul took the various items in the life of Jesus of Nazareth and found in them the proof that he was in reality "the Messiah" (ho Christos). This method of argument Paul continued to use with the Jews (Acts 17:3). It was irresistible argument and spread consternation among the Jews. It was the most powerful piece of artillery in the Jewish camp that was suddenly turned round upon them. It is probable that at this juncture Saul went into Arabia for several years (Gal 1:12-24). Luke makes no mention of this important event, but he leaves ample room for it at this point.

Verse 23

When many days were fulfilled (Hôs eplêrounto hêmèrai hikanai). Imperfect passive indicative of plêroô, old and common verb, were in process of being fulfilled. How "many" (considerable, hikanai, common word for a long period) Luke does not say nor does he say that Saul spent all of this period in Damascus, as we know from Gal 1:16-18 was not the case. Paul there states definitely that he went away from Damascus to Arabia and returned there before going back to Jerusalem and that the whole period was about "three years" which need not mean three full years, but at least portions of three. Most of the three years was probably spent in Arabia because of the two explosions in Damascus (before his departure and on his return) and because he was unknown in Jerusalem as a Christian on his arrival there. It cannot be argued from the frequent lacunae in the Acts that Luke tells all that was true or that he knew. He had his own methods and aims as every historian has. We are at perfect liberty to supplement the narrative in the Acts with items from Paul's Epistles. So we must assume the return of Saul from Arabia at this juncture, between verses Acts 9:22, 23, when Saul resumed his preaching in the Jewish synagogues with renewed energy and grasp after the period of mature reflection and readjustment in Arabia. Took counsel together (sunebouleusanto). First aorist (effective) middle indicative of sunbouleuô, old and common verb for counselling (bouleuô) together (sun). Things had reached a climax. It was worse than before he left for Arabia. Paul was now seeing the fulfilment of the prophecy of Jesus about him (Acts 9:16). To kill him (anelein auton). Second aorist (effective) active infinitive of anaireô, to take up, to make away with, to kill (Luke 23:32; Acts 12:1, etc.). The infinitive expresses purpose here as is done in verse Acts 9:24 by hopôs and the aorist active subjunctive of the same verb (anelôsin). Saul now knew what Stephen had suffered at his hands as his own life was in peril in the Jewish quarter of Damascus. It was a picture of his old self. He may even have been scourged here (2Co 11:24).

Plot (epiboulê). Old word for a plan (boulê) against (epi) one. In the N.T. only in Acts (Acts 9:24; Acts 20:3, 19; Acts 23:30). They watched (paretêrounto). Imperfect middle indicative of paratêreô, common verb in late Greek for watching beside (para) or insidiously or on the sly as in Luke 6:7, they kept on watching by day and night to kill him. In 2Co 11:32 Paul says that the Ethnarch of Aretas "kept guard" (ephrourei, imperfect active of phroureô) to seize him. Probably the Jews obtained the consent of the Ethnarch and had him appoint some of them as guards or watchers at the gate of the city.

Verse 25

Through the wall (dia tou teichous). Paul in 2Co 11:33 explains dia tou teichous as being dia thuridos (through a window) which opened into the house on the inside of the wall as is true today in Damascus as Hackett saw there. See Jos 2:15 (cf. 1Sa 19:12) for the way that Rahab let out the spies "by a cord through the window." Lowering him (auton chalasantes). First aorist active participle of chalaô, old and common verb in a nautical sense (Acts 27:17, 30) as well as otherwise as here. Same verb used by Paul of this experience (2Co 11:33). In a basket (en sphuridi). The word used when the four thousand were fed (Mark 8:8; Mat 15:37). A large basket plaited of reeds and distinguished in Mark 8:19 (Mat 16:9) from the smaller kophinos. Paul uses sarganê, a basket made of ropes. This escape by night by the help of the men whom he had come to destroy was a shameful memory to Paul (2Co 11:33). Wendt thinks that the coincidences in language here prove that Luke had read II Corinthians. That, of course, is quite possible.

Verse 26

He assayed (epeirazen). Imperfect active of conative action. To join himself (kollasthai). Present middle (direct) infinitive of conative action again. Same word kollaô in Luke 15:15; Acts 10:28. See on Mat 19:5 for discussion. Were all afraid of him (pantes ephobounto auton). They were fearing him. Imperfect middle picturing the state of mind of the disciples who had vivid recollections of his conduct when last here. What memories Saul had on this return journey to Jerusalem after three years. He had left a conquering hero of Pharisaism. He returns distrusted by the disciples and regarded by the Pharisees as a renegade and a turncoat. He made no effort to get in touch with the Sanhedrin who had sent him to Damascus. He had escaped the plots of the Jews in Damascus only to find himself the object of suspicion by the disciples in Jerusalem who had no proof of his sincerity in his alleged conversion. Not believing (mê pisteuontes). They had probably heard of his conversion, but they frankly disbelieved the reports and regarded him as a hypocrite or a spy in a new role to ruin them. Was (estin). The present tense is here retained in indirect discourse according to the common Greek idiom.

Verse 27

Took him (epilabomenos). Second aorist middle (indirect) participle of epilambanô, common verb to lay hold of. Barnabas saw the situation and took Saul to himself and listened to his story and believed it. It is to the credit of Barnabas that he had the insight and the courage to stand by Saul at the crucial moment in his life when the evidence seemed to be against him. It is a pleasing hypothesis that this influential disciple from Cyprus had gone to the University of Tarsus where he met Saul. If so, he would know more of him than those who only knew his record as a persecutor of Christians. That fact Barnabas knew also, but he was convinced that Jesus had changed the heart of Saul and he used his great influence (Acts 4:36; Acts 11:22) to win the favour of the apostles, Peter in particular (Gal 1:19) and James the half-brother of Jesus. The other apostles were probably out of the city as Paul says that he did not see them. To the apostles (pros tous apostolous). Both Barnabas and James are termed apostles in the general sense, though not belonging to the twelve, as Paul did not, though himself later a real apostle. So Barnabas introduced Saul to Peter and vouched for his story, declared it fully (diégêsato, in detail) including Saul's vision of Jesus (eiden ton kurion) as the vital thing and Christ's message to Saul (elalêsen autôi) and Saul's bold preaching (êparrêsiasato, first aorist middle indicative of parrêsiazô from pan--rêsia telling it all as in Acts 2:29). Peter was convinced and Saul was his guest for two weeks (Gal 1:18) with delightful fellowship (historêsai). He had really come to Jerusalem mainly "to visit" (to see) Peter, but not to receive a commission from him. He had that from the Lord (Gal 1:1). Both Peter and James could tell Saul of their special experiences with the Risen Christ. Furneaux thinks that Peter was himself staying at the home of Mary the mother of John Mark (Acts 12:12) who was a cousin of Barnabas (Col 4:10). This is quite possible. At any rate Saul is now taken into the inner circle of the disciples in Jerusalem.

Verse 28

Going in and going out (eisporeuomenos kai êkporeuomenos). Barnabas and Peter and James opened all the doors for Saul and the fear of the disciples vanished.

Verse 29

Preaching boldly (parrêsiazomenos). For a while. Evidently Saul did not extend his preaching outside of Jerusalem (Gal 1:22) and in the city preached mainly in the synagogues of the Hellenists (pros tous Hellenistas) as Stephen had done (Acts 8:9). As a Cilician Jew he knew how to speak to the Hellenists. Disputed (sunezêtei). Imperfect active of sunzêteô, the very verb used in Acts 6:9 of the disputes with Stephen in these very synagogues in one of which (Cilicia) Saul had probably joined issue with Stephen to his own discomfort. It was intolerable to these Hellenistic Jews now to hear Saul taking the place of Stephen and using the very arguments that Stephen had employed. But they went about to kill him (Hoi de epecheiroun anelein auton). Demonstrative hoi with de and the conative imperfect of epicheireô, to put the hand to, to try, an old verb used in the N.T. only three times (Luke 1:1; Acts 9:29; Acts 19:3). They offer to Saul the same conclusive answer that he gave to Stephen, death. Paul tells how the Lord Jesus appeared to him at this juncture in a vision in the temple (Acts 22:17-21) with the distinct command to leave Jerusalem and how Paul protested that he was willing to meet the fate of Stephen in whose death he had a shameful part. That is to Saul's credit, but the Lord did not want Saul to be put to death yet. His crown of martyrdom will come later.

Verse 30

Knew it (epignontes). Second aorist active participle of epiginôskô, to know fully. The disciples saw it clearly, so they conducted (katêgagon, effective second aorist active indicative of katagô). Sent forth (exapesteilan). Double compound (ex, out, apo, away or off). Sent him out and off to Tarsus (eis Tarson). Silence is preserved by Luke. But it takes little imagination to picture the scene at home when this brilliant young rabbi, the pride of Gamaliel, returns home a preacher of the despised Jesus of Nazareth whose disciples he had so relentlessly persecuted. What will father, mother, sister think of him now?

Verse 31

So the church (Hê men oun ekklêsia). The singular ekklêsia is undoubtedly the true reading here (all the great documents have it so). By this time there were churches scattered over Judea, Galilee, and Samaria (Gal 1:22), but Luke either regards the disciples in Palestine as still members of the one great church in Jerusalem (instance already the work of Philip in Samaria and soon of Peter in Joppa and Caesarea) or he employs the term ekklêsia in a geographical or collective sense covering all of Palestine. The strictly local sense we have seen already in Acts 8:1, 3 (and Mat 18:17) and the general spiritual sense in Mat 16:18. But in Acts 8:3 it is plain that the term is applied to the organization of Jerusalem Christians even when scattered in their homes. The use of men oun (so) is Luke's common way of gathering up the connection. The obvious meaning is that the persecution ceased because the persecutor had been converted. The wolf no longer ravined the sheep. It is true also that the effort of Caligula A.D. 39 to set up his image in the temple in Jerusalem for the Jews to worship greatly excited the Jews and gave them troubles of their own (Josephus, Ant. XVIII. 8, 2-9). Had peace (eichen eirênên). Imperfect active. Kept on having peace, enjoying peace, because the persecution had ceased. Many of the disciples came back to Jerusalem and the apostles began to make preaching tours out from the city. This idiom (echô eirênên) occurs again in Rom 5:1 (eirênên echômen, present active subjunctive) where it has been grievously misunderstood. There it is an exhortation to keep on enjoying the peace with God already made, not to make peace with God which would be eirênên schômen (ingressive aorist subjunctive). Edified (oikodomoumenê). Present passive participle, linear action also. One result of the enjoyment of peace after the persecution was the continued edification (Latin word aedificatio for building up a house), a favourite figure with Paul (1Co 14:1-40; Eph 3:1-21) and scattered throughout the N.T., old Greek verb. In 1Pe 2:5 Peter speaks of "the spiritual house" throughout the five Roman provinces being "built up" (cf. Mat 16:18). In the comfort of the Holy Spirit (têi paraklêsei tou hagiou pneumatos). Either locative (in) or instrumental case (by). The Holy Spirit had been promised by Jesus as "another Paraclete" and now this is shown to be true. The only instance in Acts of the use of paraklêsis with the Holy Spirit. The word, of course, means calling to one's side (parakaleô) either for advice or for consolation. Was multiplied (eplêthuneto). Imperfect middle passive. The multiplication of the disciples kept pace with the peace, the edification, the walking in the fear of the Lord, the comfort of the Holy Spirit. The blood of the martyrs was already becoming the seed of the church. Stephen had not borne his witness in vain.

Verse 32

Lydda (Ludda). In O.T. Lod (1Ch 8:12) and near Joppa. Later Diospolis.

Verse 33

Aenias (Ainean). Old Greek name and so probably a Hellenistic Jew. He was apparently a disciple already (the saint, verse Acts 9:32). Luke the physician notes that he had been bed ridden for eight years. See on Acts 5:15 for "bed" (krabattou) and Acts 8:7; Luke 5:18 for "paralyzed" (paralelumenos, perfect passive participle of paraluô with ên, periphrastic past perfect passive).

Verse 34

Healeth (iâtai). Aoristic present middle indicative, heals here and now. Make thy bed (strôson seautôi). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative of strônnumi (-uô). Old word with "bed" (krabatton) understood as the object. Literally, spread thy bed for thyself (dative case), what others for eight years have done for thee.

Verse 35

Sharon (Sarôna). The Plain of Sharon, not a town. Thirty miles long from Joppa to Caesarea.

Verse 36

At Joppa (En Ioppêi). The modern Jaffa, the port of Jerusalem (2Ch 2:16). Disciple (mathêtria). Feminine form of mathêtês, a learner from manthanô, to learn, a late word and only here in the N.T. Tabitha (Tabeitha). Aramaic form of the Hebrew Tsebi and, like the Greek word Dorcas (Dorkas), means Gazelle, "the creature with the beautiful look" (or eyes), from derkomai. The gazelle was a favourite type for beauty in the orient (Song of Solomon Acts 2:9, 17; Acts 4:5; Acts 7:3). She may have had both the Aramaic and the Greek name, Tabitha Dorcas like John Mark. There is nothing said about a husband and so she was probably unmarried. She is the second woman mentioned by name after Pentecost (Sapphira the other). She did her beautiful deeds by herself. She did not have a Dorcas society. Did (epoiei). Imperfect active, her habit.

Verse 37

In an upper chamber (en huperôîôi). See on Acts 1:13. Also in verse Acts 9:39. In that house. This service was rendered by the women, though Luke has lousantes (masculine plural aorist active participle of louô), a general way of saying "they washed." The interment was not hurried as in Jerusalem (Ananias and Sapphira) and the upper room is where the body was usually placed.

Verse 38

Delay not (mê oknêsêis). Ingressive aorist active subjunctive in prohibition. Direct discourse and not indirect as late MSS. have (aorist active infinitive, oknêsai). Possibly the two messengers started before Dorcas was quite dead, though we do not know. Peter had recently healed Aeneas and the disciples may have had faith enough to believe that he could raise the dead by the power of Christ. W. M. Ramsay doubts if Dorcas was really dead, but why see legends in these supernatural events?

Verse 39

Stood by him (parestêsan autôi). Second aorist active indicative, intransitive, of paristêmi). Vivid picture of this group of widows as they stood around Peter, weeping (klaiousai) and showing (epideiknumenai, present middle as belonging to themselves, pointing with pride to) the very inner garments (chitônas) and outer garments (himatia), like the Latin tunica and toga, which she made from time to time (epoiei, imperfect active, repeated action). It was a heart-breaking scene.

Verse 40

Put them all forth (ekballôn exô pantas). Second aorist (effective) active participle of ekballô, a rather strong word, perhaps with some difficulty. Cf. Mark 5:40 which incident Peter may have recalled. The words are not genuine in Luke 8:54. Peter's praying alone reminds one of Elijah (1Ki 17:20) and the widow's son and Elisha for the Shunammite's son (2Ki 4:33). Tabitha, arise (Tabeitha, anastêthi). With sublime faith like Taleitha koum of Jesus in Mark 5:41. She sat up (anekathisen). Effective aorist active indicative of anakathizô. Often in medical writers, only here in the N.T. and Luke 7:15 where Westcott and Hort have in the margin the un-compounded form ekathisen. Vivid picture.

Verse 41

Raised her up (anestêsen autên). First aorist active indicative, transitive, of anistêmi. Presented (parestêsen). First aorist active indicative, transitive of paristêmi (cf. intransitive second aorist in verse Acts 9:39 above). It was a joyful time for Peter, the widows, all the saints, and for Dorcas.

Verse 43

Many days (hêmeras hikanas). See on verse Acts 9:23. Luke is fond of the phrase and uses it for time, number, size. It might be "ten days, ten months, or ten years" (Page). With one Simon a tanner (para tini Simôni bursei). The use of para is usual for staying with one (by his side). "The more scrupulous Jews regarded such an occupation as unclean, and avoided those who pursued it. The conduct of Peter here shows that he did not carry his prejudices to that extent" (Hackett). One of the rabbis said: "It is impossible for the world to do without tanners; but woe to him who is a tanner." A Jewess could sue for divorce if she discovered that her husband was a tanner. And yet Peter will have scruples on the housetop in the tanner's house about eating food considered unclean. "The lodging with the tanner was a step on the road to eating with a Gentile" (Furneaux).

Cornelius (Kornêlios). The great Cornelian family of Rome may have had a freedman or descendant who is centurion (hekatontarchês, leader of a hundred, Latin centurio). See on Mat 8:5. These Roman centurions always appear in a favourable light in the N.T. (Mat 8:5; Luke 7:2; Luke 23:47; Acts 10:1; Acts 22:25; Acts 27:3). Furneaux notes the contrasts between Joppa, the oldest town in Palestine, and Caesarea, built by Herod; the Galilean fisherman lodging with a tanner and the Roman officer in the seat of governmental authority. Of the band called the Italian (ek speirês tês kaloumenês Italikês). A legion had ten cohorts or "bands" and sixty centuries. The word speirês (note genitive in -es like the Ionic instead of -as) is here equal to the Latin cohors. In the provinces were stationed cohorts of Italic citizens (volunteers) as an inscription at Carnuntum on the Danube (Ramsay) has shown (epitaph of an officer in the second Italic cohort). Once more Luke has been vindicated. The soldiers could, of course, be Roman citizens who lived in Caesarea. But the Italian cohorts were sent to any part of the empire as needed. The procurator at Caesarea would need a cohort whose loyalty he could trust, for the Jews were restless.

Verse 2

Devout (eusebês). Old word from eu (well) and sebomai (to worship, to reverence), but rare in the N.T. (Acts 10:2, 7; 2Pe 2:1). It might refer to a worshipful pagan (Acts 17:23, sebasmata, objects of worship), but connected with "one that feared God" (phoboumenos ton theon) Luke describes "a God-fearing proselyte" as in Acts 10:22, 35. This is his usual term for the Gentile seekers after God (Acts 13:16; Acts 26; Acts 17:4, 17, etc.), who had come into the worship of the synagogue without circumcision, and were not strictly proselytes, though some call such men "proselytes of the gate" (cf. Acts 13:43); but clearly Cornelius and his family were still regarded as outside the pale of Judaism (Acts 10:28, 34; Acts 11:1, 8; Acts 15:7). They had seats in the synagogue, but were not Jews. Gave much alms (poiôn eleemosunas pollas). Doing many alms (the very phrase in Mat 6:2), a characteristic mark of Jewish piety and from a Gentile to the Jewish people. Prayed (deomenos). Begging of God. Almsgiving and prayer were two of the cardinal points with the Jews (Jesus adds fasting in his picture of the Pharisee in Mat 6:1-18).

Verse 3

Coming in (eiselthonta). Ingressive second aorist active participle, not present. So punctiliar, "saw come," not "saw coming." So also "say" or "speak," not "saying." Luke repeats the account of this vision to Cornelius twice (Acts 10:30; Acts 11:13) and also the story of the vision to Peter (Acts 10:1-16, 28; Acts 11:5).

Verse 4

Lord (kurie). Cornelius recognizes the angel of God (verse Acts 10:3) as God's messenger. Are gone up (anebésan). Timeless second aorist active indicative of anabainô. Gone up like the smoke of incense in sacrifices. For a memorial (eis mnêmosunon). Old word from mnêmôn. The only other instance in the N.T. is by Jesus about the act of Mary of Bethany (Mat 26:13; Mark 14:9). His prayers and his alms proved his sincerity and won the ear of God.

Verse 5

Fetch (metapempsai). First aorist middle (indirect, for one's self) imperative of metapempô, usual voice in ancient Greek with this verb in sense of sending another for one's own sake. Only in Acts in the N.T. See also Acts 10:22.

Verse 6

Lodgeth (xenizetai). Present passive indicative of xenizô old verb from xenos, a stranger as a guest. So to entertain a guest as here or to surprise by strange acts (Acts 17:20; 1Pe 4:4). Whose (hôi). To whom, dative of possession. By the seaside (para thalassan). Along by the sea. Note accusative case. Outside the city walls because a tanner and to secure water for his trade. Some tanneries are by the seashore at Jaffa today.

Verse 8

Rehearsed (exêgêsamenos). See on Luke 24:35. All the details about the vision. The soldier was "devout" like Cornelius and would protect the two household servants (oiketôn).

Verse 9

On the morrow (têi epaurion). Locative case of article with the compound adverb (hêmerâi day being understood), the second day after leaving Caesarea, 28 miles from Joppa. The third day (the next morrow, verse Acts 10:23) they start back home and the fourth day (on the morrow again, verse Acts 10:24) they reach Caesarea. As they (ekeinôn). The party of three from Caesarea. Genitive absolute with present participle hodoiporountôn (journeying) and eggizontôn (drew nigh). The housetop (to dôma). Old word and in Gospels (Luke 3:19, etc.), but only here in Acts. From demô, to build, and so any part of the building (hall, dining room, and then roof). The roof was nearly flat with walls around and so was a good place for meditation and prayer and naps.

Verse 10

Hungry (prospeinos) Only instance of the word known, a hapax legomenon. Probably "very hungry" (pros=besides, in addition). Desired (êthelen). Imperfect active. Was longing to eat. It was about twelve o'clock noon and Peter may even have smelt the savory dishes, "while they made ready" (paraskeuazontôn). "The natural and the supernatural border closely on one another, with no definable limits" (Furneaux). He fell into a trance (egeneto ep' auton ekstasis). More exactly, "An ecstasy came upon him," in which trance he passed out of himself (ekstasis, from existêmi) and from which one came to himself (Acts 12:11). Cf. also Acts 11:5; Acts 22:17. It is thus different from a vision (horama) as in verse Acts 10:3.

Verse 11

Beholdeth (theôrei). Vivid historical present and change from past time. Opened (aneôigmenon, perfect passive participle with double reduplication, state of completion). Descending (katabainon). Present active participle describing the process. Sheet (othonên). Old word for linen cloth and only here in the N.T. Accusative case in apposition with skeuos (vessel). Let down (Kathiemenon). Present passive participle of Kathiêmi. Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Luke 5:19; Acts 9:25. Linear action here picturing the process, "being let down." By four corners (tessarsin archais). Instrumental case of archê, beginning. We say "end" or extremity for this use of the word. The picture is the sheet held up by four cords to which the sheet is fastened. Isa 11:12 had said that Israel would be gathered from the four corners of the earth. Knowling follows Hobart in taking the four corners of the sheet to be a medical phrase for bandage (the end of a bandage).

Verse 12

Were (hupêrchen). Imperfect of huparchô in sense of ên, to exist, be. Fish are not mentioned, perhaps because the sheet had no water, though they were clean and unclean also (Lev 11:9; Deut 14:9). All manner of (panta). Literally, all, but clearly all varieties, not all individuals. Both clean and unclean animals are in the sheet.

Not so, Lord (Mêdamôs, kurie). The negative mêdamôs calls for the optative eiê (may it not be) or the imperative estô (let it be). It is not oudamôs, a blunt refusal (I shall not do it). And yet it is more than a mild protest as Page and Furneaux argue. It is a polite refusal with a reason given. Peter recognizes the invitation to slay (thuson) the unclean animals as from the Lord (kurie) but declines it three times. For I have never eaten anything (hoti oudepote ephagon pan). Second aorist active indicative, I never did anything like this and I shall not do it now. The use of pan (everything) with oudepote (never) is like the Hebrew (lo--k"l) though a like idiom appears in the vernacular Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, p. 752). Common and unclean (koinon kai akatharton). Koinos from epic xunos (xun, sun, together with) originally meant common to several (Latin communis) as in Acts 2:44; Acts 4:32; Tit 1:4; Jude 1:3. The use seen here (also Mark 7:2, 5; Rom 14:14; Heb 10:29; Rev 21:27; Acts 10:28; Acts 11:8), like Latin vulgaris is unknown in ancient Greek. Here the idea is made plain by the addition of akatharton (unclean), ceremonially unclean, of course. We have the same double use in our word "common." See on Mark 7:18 where Mark adds the remarkable participle katharizôn (making all meats clean), evidently from Peter who recalls this vision. Peter had been reared from childhood to make the distinction between clean and unclean food and this new proposal even from the Lord runs against all his previous training. He did not see that some of God's plans for the Jews could be temporary. This symbol of the sheet was to show Peter ultimately that Gentiles could be saved without becoming Jews. At this moment he is in spiritual and intellectual turmoil.

Verse 15

Make not thou common (su mê koinou). Note emphatic position of su (thou). Do thou stop making common what God cleansed (ekatharisen). The idiom of mê with the present active imperative koinou means precisely this. Peter had just called "common" what God had invited him to slay and eat.

Verse 16

Thrice (epitris). For three times. Peter remained unconvinced even by the prohibition of God. Here is a striking illustration of obstinacy on the part of one who acknowledges the voice of God to him when the command of the Lord crosses one's preferences and prejudices. There are abundant examples today of precisely this thing. In a real sense Peter was maintaining a pose of piety beyond the will of the Lord. Peter was defiling what God had cleansed. Was received up (anelêmphthê). First aorist passive indicative of analambanô, to take up. The word used of the Ascension (Acts 1:22).

Was much perplexed in himself (en heautôi diêporei). Imperfect active of diaporeô, intensive compound (dia, thoroughly, and a privative and poros, way), to be completely at a loss to know what road to take. Old verb, but in N.T. only in Luke and Acts. Page notes that Luke is singularly fond of verbs compounded with dia. See on Luke 9:7 and Acts 2:12. When out of the ecstasy he was more puzzled than ever. Might be (an eiê). Optative with an in indirect question simply retained from the direct (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1021, 1044). See Acts 17:18, for the direct and Luke 1:62 for the indirect (an theloi both times). It is the conclusion of a fourth class condition. Having made inquiry (dierôtêsantes). First aorist active participle of dierôtaô, another compound of dia, to ask one after another, to ask through, old verb, but only here in the N.T. It took diligent inquiry to find the obscure house of Simon the tanner. Stood before the gate (epestêsan epi ton pulôna). Second aorist active indicative of ephistêmi, intransitive. Note repetition of epi. The messengers stopped right at the folding gates of the passage (pulôna) which led from the street to the inner court or house.

Verse 18

Called (phônêsantes). In a loud voice that those inside the house might hear. Asked (epunthanonto). Imperfect middle of punthanomai, old verb to make inquiry especially with an indirect question as here. Kept on inquiring. Westcott and Hort follow B C here and read eputhonto (second aorist middle, effective aorist). Either makes sense, though the imperfect is more picturesque. Were lodging (xenizetai). Present middle indicative retained in indirect question. See on verse Acts 10:6 for the verb.

Verse 19

Thought (dienthumoumenou). Genitive absolute of present middle participle of dienthumeomai, a double compound (dia and en- with thumos) and another hapax legomenon save in ecclesiastical writers, though enthumeomai is common enough and Textus Receptus so reads here. Peter was revolving in his mind, through and through, in and out, to find the meaning of the strange vision.

Verse 20

But (alla). So usually, though it is open to question whether alla is adversative here and not rather, "Now then." Get thee down (katabêthi). Second aorist active imperative, at once. Go (poreuou). Present middle imperative, go on. Nothing doubting (mêden diakrinomenos). Another compound of dia, old and common verb for a divided mind (dia like duo, two). Note usual negative of the present middle participle, the subjective mêden. The notion of wavering (Jas 1:6) is common with this verb in the middle voice. In Acts 11:12 the aorist active (mêden diakrinanta) is used perhaps with the idea of conduct towards others rather than his own internal doubt as here (Page). For I (hoti egô). The Holy Spirit assumes responsibility for the messengers from Cornelius and thus connects their mission with the vision which was still troubling Peter. Peter had heard his name called by the man (verse Acts 10:19).

Verse 21

Cause (aitia). Or reason. Common in this sense. See on Mat 19:3.

Verse 22

Righteous (dikaios). In the Jewish sense as in Luke 1:6; Luke 2:25. Well reported of (marturooumenos). Present passive participle as in Acts 6:3. Cf. the other centurion in Luke 7:4. Nation (ethnous). Not laou, for the speakers are Gentiles. Was warned (echrêmatisthê). First aorist passive of chrêmatizô, old word for doing business, then consulting an oracle, and here of being divinely (word God not expressed) warned as in Mat 2:12, 22; Luke 2:26; Heb 11:7. Then to be called or receive a name from one's business as in Acts 11:26; Rom 7:3.

Verse 23

Lodged them (exenisen). Active voice here rather than passive as in Acts 10:6. Accompanied him (sunêlthan autôi). Associative instrumental case after verb. The wisdom of having these half dozen Jewish Christians from Joppa with Peter in the house of Cornelius in Caesarea becomes manifest in Jerusalem (Acts 11:12).

Verse 24

Was waiting (ên prosdokôn). Periphrastic imperfect active, in eager expectation and hope, directing the mind (dokaô) towards (pros) anything. Old and common verb. Near (anagkaious). Only instance in the N.T. of this sense of anagkaios from anagkê, necessity, what one cannot do without, necessary (1Co 12:22), duty (Acts 13:46), or blood relations as here. The ancient Greek writers combined these two words (suggeneis, kinsmen, anagkaious, necessary friends) as here. It was a homogeneous group of Gentiles close to Cornelius and predisposed to hear Peter favourably.

Verse 25

That Peter entered (tou eiselthein ton Petron). This is a difficult construction, for the subject of egeneto (it happened) has to be the articular genitive infinitive tou eiselthein with the accusative of general reference ton Petron. Most commentators consider it inexplicable. It is probably an extension of the ordinary articular infinitive under the influence of the Hebrew infinitive construct without regard to the case, regarding it as a fixed case form and so using it as nominative. Precisely this construction of tou and the infinitive as the subject of a verb occurs in the LXX (2Ch 6:7, etc.). See Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1067f. for full discussion of this obvious Hebraism. Somewhat similar examples appear in Acts 20:3; Acts 27:1. But the Codex Bezae avoids this awkward idiom by the genitive absolute (proseggizontos tou Petrou) and some additional details (one of the servants ran forward and announced that he was come). Worshipped him (prosekunêsen). "Cornelius was not an idolator and would not have honoured Peter as a god" (Furneaux). The word probably means here reverence like old English usage (Wycliff) and not actual worship, though Peter took it that way (verse Acts 10:26). Jesus accepted such worship (Mat 8:2; Luke 5:8 by Peter).

Verse 27

As he talked with him (sunomilôn autôî). Present active participle of sunomileô, rare compound and here alone in the N.T., with associative instrumental case. The uncompounded verb is common enough though in the N.T. only in Luke 24:14 which see and Acts 20:11; Acts 24:26. Findeth (heuriskei). Vivid historical present indicative active. Come together (sunelêluthotas). Second perfect active participle of sunerchomai. It was an expectant group of Gentiles eager for Peter's interpretation of the vision of Cornelius.

Verse 28

How that it is an unlawful thing (hôs athemiton estin). The conjunction hôs is sometimes equivalent to hoti (that). The old form of athemitos was athemistos from themisto (themizô, themis, law custom) and a privative. In the N.T. only here and 1Pe 4:3 (Peter both times). But there is no O.T. regulation forbidding such social contact with Gentiles, though the rabbis had added it and had made it binding by custom. There is nothing more binding on the average person than social custom. On coming from the market an orthodox Jew was expected to immerse to avoid defilement (Edersheim, Jewish Social Life, pp. 26-28; Taylor's Sayings of the Jewish Fathers, pp. 15, 26, 137, second edition). See also Acts 11:3; Gal 2:12. It is that middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile (Eph 2:14) which Jesus broke down. One of another nation (allophulôî). Dative case of an old adjective, but only here in the N.T. (allos, another, phulon, race). Both Juvenal (Sat. XIV. 104, 105) and Tacitus (History, V. 5) speak of the Jewish exclusiveness and separation from Gentiles. And yet unto (kamoi). Dative of the emphatic pronoun (note position of prominence) with kai (crasis) meaning here "and yet" or adversative "but" as often with kai which is by no means always merely the connective "and" (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1182f.). Now Peter takes back both the adjectives used in his protest to the Lord (verse Acts 10:14) "common and unclean." It is a long journey that Peter has made. He here refers to "no one" (mêdena), not to "things," but that is great progress.

Verse 29

Without gainsaying (anantirrhêtôs). A privative with compound adverb from anti (back, in return, against) and verbal rhêtos (from errhêthên, to speak). Late and rare and here only in the N.T., but the adjective in Acts 19:36. Without answering back. That is true after the Holy Spirit expressly told Peter to go with the messengers of Cornelius (Acts 10:19-23). Peter's objections were made to the Lord in the vision which he did not understand. But that vision prepared him for this great step which he had now taken. He had stepped over the line of Jewish custom. With what intent (tini logôî). More exactly, "for what reason" as in Plato, Gorgias 512 C.

Verse 30

Four days ago (apo tetartês hêmeras). From the fourth day, reckoning backwards from this day. I was keeping the ninth hour of prayer (êmên tèn enatên proseuchomenos). Periphrastic middle imperfect and accusative of extension of time (all the ninth hour).

Verse 31

Is heard (eisékousthê). Sort of timeless first aorist passive indicative as is "are had in remembrance" (emnêsthêsan. See verse Acts 10:4 "are gone up for a memorial").

Verse 32

In the house of Simon (en oikiâi Simônos). See Acts 9:43 for para Simôni with same idea.

Verse 33

And thou hast well done that thou art come (su te kalôs epoiêsas paragenomenos). "And thou didst well in coming." A regular formula for expressing thanks as in Php 4:14; 3Jn 1:6; 2Pe 1:19. The participle completes the idea of kalôs poieô neatly. Cornelius commends Peter for his courage in breaking away from Jewish custom and takes no offence at the implied superiority of the Jews over the Gentiles. Cornelius and his circle of kinsmen and close friends are prepared soil for a new era in the history of Christianity. The Samaritans were now nominal Jews and the Ethiopian eunuch was a single case, but here Peter the chief apostle, not Philip the preaching deacon (evangelist), was involved. It was a crisis. Cornelius reveals an open mind for the message of God through Peter. Commanded thee (prostetagma soi). Perfect passive participle with the dative case (soi). Cornelius is a military man and he employs a military term (prostassô, old word to command). He is ready for orders from the Lord.

Verse 34

Opened his mouth (anoixas to stoma). Solemn formula for beginning his address (Acts 8:35; Acts 18:14; Mat 5:2; Mat 13:35). But also good elocution for the speaker. I perceive (katalambanomai). Aoristic present middle of katalambanô, to take hold of, the middle noting mental action, to lay hold with the mind (Acts 4:13; Acts 10:34; Acts 25:25; Eph 3:18). It had been a difficult thing for Peter to grasp, but now "of a truth" (ep' alêtheias) the light has cleared away the fogs. It was not until Peter had crossed the threshold of the house of Cornelius in the new environment and standpoint that he sees this new and great truth. Respecter of persons (prosôpolêmptês). This compound occurs only here and in Chrysostom. It is composed of prosôpon face or person (pros and ops, before the eye or face) and lambanô. The abstract form prosôpolêmptêsia occurs in Jas 2:1 (also Rom 2:11; Eph 6:9; Col 3:25) and the verb prosôpolempteô in Jas 2:9. The separate phrase (lambanein prosôpon) occurs in Luke 20:21; Gal 2:6. The phrase was already in the LXX (Deut 10:17; 2Ch 19:7; Ps 82:6). Luke has simply combined the two words into one compound one. The idea is to pay regard to one's looks or circumstances rather than to his intrinsic character. The Jews had come to feel that they were the favourites of God and actually sons of the kingdom of heaven because they were descendants of Abraham. John the Baptist rebuked them for this fallacy.

Verse 35

Acceptable to him (dektos autôî). Verbal adjective from dechomai. Acceptabilis. That is to say, a Gentile would not have to become a Jew in order to become a Christian. Evidently Peter had not before perceived this fact. On the great Day of Pentecost when he spoke of the promise "to all those afar off" (Acts 2:39) Peter understood that they must first become Jews and then Christians. The new idea that now makes a revolution in Peter's outlook is precisely this that Christ can and will save Gentiles like this Cornelius group without their becoming Jews at all.

Verse 36

The word which he sent (ton logon hon apesteilen). Many ancient MSS. (so Westcott and Hort) read merely ton logon apesteilen (he sent the word). This reading avoids the anacoluthon and inverse attraction of logon to the case of the relative hon (which). Preaching good tidings of peace through Jesus Christ (euaggelizomenos eirênên dia Iêsou Christou). Gospelizing peace through Jesus Christ. There is no other way to have real peace between individuals and God, between races and nations, than by Jesus Christ. Almost this very language occurs in Eph 2:17 where Paul states that Jesus on the cross "preached (gospelized) peace to you who are afar off and peace to you who are near." Peter here sees what Paul will see later with great clearness. He is Lord of all (houtos estin pantôn kurios). A triumphant parenthesis that Peter throws in as the reason for his new truth. Jesus Christ is Lord of all, both Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 37

Ye know (humeis oidate). Peter reminds his Gentile audience that the main facts concerning Jesus and the gospel were known to them. Note emphatic expression of humeis (you). Beginning (arxamenos). The Textus Receptus has arxamenon (accusative), but the nominative is given by Aleph A B C D E H and is certainly correct. But it makes a decided anacoluthon. The accusative would agree with rhêma used in the sense of message or story as told by the disciples. The nominative does not agree with anything in the sentence. The same phrase occurs in Luke 23:5. Here is this aorist middle participle almost used like an adverb. See a similar loose use of arxamenos in the same sense by Peter in Acts 1:22. The baptism of John is given as the terminus a quo. The story began with a skip to Galilee after the baptism just like the Gospel of Mark. This first message of Peter to the Gentiles (Acts 10:37-44) corresponds in broad outline with Mark's Gospel. Mark heard Peter preach many times and evidently planned his Gospel (the Roman Gospel) on this same model. There is in it nothing about the birth and childhood of Jesus nor about the intervening ministry supplied by John's Gospel for the period (a year) between the baptism and the Galilean Ministry. Peter here presents an objective statement of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus with proof from the Scriptures that he is the Messiah. It is a skilful presentation.

Verse 38

Jesus of Nazareth (Iêsoun ton apo Nazareth). Jesus the one from Nazareth, the article before the city identifying him clearly. The accusative case is here by prolepsis, Jesus being expressed for emphasis before the verb "anointed" and the pronoun repeated pleonastically after it. "Jesus transfers the mind from the gospel-history to the personal subject of it" (Hackett). God anointed him (echrisen, auton, ho theos). First aorist active of the verb chriô, to anoint, from which the verbal Christos is formed (Acts 2:36). The precise event referred to by Peter could be the Incarnation (Luke 1:35), the Baptism (Luke 3:22), the Ministry at Nazareth (Luke 4:14). Why not to the life and work of Jesus as a whole? Went about doing good (diêlthen euergetôn). Beautiful description of Jesus. Summary (constative) aorist active of dierehomai, to go through (dia) or from place to place. The present active participle euergetôn is from the old verb euergeteô (eu, well, ergon, work) and occurs only here in the N.T. The substantive euergetês (benefactor) was often applied to kings like Ptolemy Euergetes and that is the sense in Luke 22:25 the only N.T. example. But the term applies to Jesus far more than to Ptolemy or any earthly king (Cornelius a Lapide). And healing (kai iômenos). And in particular healing. Luke does not exclude other diseases (cf. Luke 13:11, 16), but he lays special emphasis on demoniacal possession (cf. Mark 1:23). That were oppressed (tous katadunasteuomenous). Present passive articular participle of katadunasteuô. A late verb in LXX and papyri. In the N.T. only here and Jas 2:6 (best MSS.). One of the compounds of kata made transitive. The reality of the devil (the slanderer, diabolos) is recognized by Peter. For God was with him (hoti ho theos ên met' autou). Surely this reason does not reveal "a low Christology" as some charge. Peter had used the same language in Acts 7:9 and earlier in Luke 1:28, 66 as Nicodemus does in John 3:2.

Verse 39

And we are witnesses (kai hêmeis martures). Compare "ye yourselves know" (verse Acts 10:37). Peter thus appeals to what the audience know and to what the disciples know. He made the same claim about personal witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus at Pentecost (Acts 2:32). Here Peter affirms full knowledge of the work of Jesus in Judea (for whole country including Galilee and Perea) and Jerusalem (given mainly in John's Gospel). In the Greek hôn (which) is attracted into the genitive case to agree with the antecedent pantôn (all), a common enough idiom. Whom also they slew (hon kai aneilan). Second aorist active indicative of anaireô with a as often in Acts (Acts 2:23; Acts 5:30). But note kai (also) in the old MSS., not in the Textus Receptus. They "also" slew him, went that far, "this crowning atrocity" (Vincent), kai could here be "even." Hanging him on a tree (kremasantes epi xulou). This same expression used by Peter in Acts 5:30 which see for discussion.

Verse 40

Gave him to be made manifest (edôken auton emphanê genesthai). Peculiar phrase, here only in the N.T. and in Rom 10:20 (quoted from Isa 65:1). Emphanê, predicate accusative after infinitive genesthai agreeing with auton object of edôken.

Verse 41

Chosen before (prokecheirotoneô). Perfect passive participle dative plural from procheirotoneô, to choose or designate by hand (cheirotoneô, cheir, hand, and teinô, to stretch, as in Acts 14:23; 2Co 8:19), beforehand (pro), a double compound as old as Plato, but here alone in the N.T. Peter is evidently stating the thing as it happened and not trying to make a convincing story by saying that both friends and foes saw him after his resurrection. It is the "historian's candour" (Paley) in Luke here that adds to the credibility of the narrative. The sceptical Jews would not have believed and Jesus was kept from open contact with the world of sin after his Passion. To us who did eat and drink with him (hêmin hoitines sunephagomen kai sunepiomen autôi). The "who" (hoitines) is first person agreeing with "us" (hêmin). Second aorist active indicative of the common verbs sunesthiô and sumpinô. Autôi is associative instrumental case. There are difficulties to us in understanding how Jesus could eat and drink after the resurrection as told here and in Luke 24:41-3, but at any rate Peter makes it clear that it was no hallucination or ghost, but Jesus himself whom they saw after he rose from the dead, "after the rising as to him" (meta to anastênai auton, meta with the accusative articular infinitive second aorist active and the accusative auton of general reference). Furneaux dares to think that the disciples misunderstood Jesus about eating after the resurrection. But that is to deny the testimony merely because we cannot explain the transition state of the body of Jesus.

Verse 42

He charged (parêggeilen). First aorist active indicative as in Acts 1:4. There Jesus is the subject and so probably here, though Page insists that ho theos (God) is here because of verse Acts 10:40. To testify (diamarturasthai). First aorist middle infinitive. See on Acts 2:40. Ordained (hôrismenos). Perfect passive participle of horizô, old verb, to mark out, to limit, to make a horizon. Judge (kritês). The same point made by Peter in 1Pe 4:5. He does not use the word "Messiah" to these Gentiles though he did say "anointed" (echrisen) in verse Acts 10:38. Peter's claim for Jesus is that he is the Judge of Jew and Gentile (living and dead).

Verse 43

Every one that believeth (panta ton pisteuonta). This accusative active participle of general reference with the infinitive in indirect discourse is the usual idiom. Only labein (second aorist active infinitive of labanô) is not indirect statement so much as indirect command or arrangement. The prophets bear witness to Jesus Christ to this effect. It is God's plan and no race distinctions are drawn. Peter had already said the same thing at Pentecost (Acts 2:38), but now he sees himself that Gentiles do not have to become Jews, but have only to believe in Jesus as Messiah and Judge as foretold by the prophets. It was glorious news to Cornelius and his group. Through his name (dia tou onomatos autou), not as a title or magic formula (Acts 18:13), but the power of Christ himself represented by his name.

Verse 44

While Peter yet spake (eti lalountos tou Petrou). Genitive absolute of present participle, still going on. The Holy Ghost fell (epepesen to pneuma to hagion). Second aorist active indicative of epiptô, old verb to fall upon, to recline, to come upon. Used of the Holy Spirit in Acts 8:16; Acts 10:44; Acts 11:15. It appears that Peter was interrupted in his sermon by this remarkable event. The Jews had received the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:4), the Samaritans (Acts 8:17), and now Gentiles. But on this occasion it was before baptism, as was apparently true in Paul's case (Acts 9:17). In Acts 8:16; Acts 19:5 the hands of the apostles were also placed after baptism on those who received the Holy Spirit. Here it was unexpected by Peter and by Cornelius and was indubitable proof of the conversion of these Gentiles who had accepted Peter's message and had believed on Jesus Christ as Saviour.

Verse 45

They of the circumcision which believed (hoi ek peritomês pistoi). The believing ones of the circumcision, more exactly. Were amazed (exestêsan). Second aorist active indicative, intransitive, of existêmi. They stood out of themselves. On the Gentiles also (kai epi ta ethnê). Or, even upon the Gentiles. Was poured out (ekkechutai). Present perfect passive retained in indirect discourse of ekcheô or ekchunô, old verb, used metaphorically of the Holy Spirit also in Acts 2:17 (from Joel 2:28), Acts 2:33.

Verse 46

They heard (êkouon). Imperfect active, were hearing, kept on hearing. Speak (lalountôn). Present active participle, speaking, for they kept it up. With tongues (glôssais). Instrumental case as in Acts 2:4, 11 which see. The fuller statement there makes it clear that here it was new and strange tongues also as in Acts 19:6; 1Co 14:4-19. This sudden manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power on uncircumcised Gentiles was probably necessary to convince Peter and the six brethren of the circumcision that God had opened the door wide to Gentiles. It was proof that a Gentile Pentecost had come and Peter used it effectively in his defence in Jerusalem (Acts 11:15).

Verse 47

Can any man forbid the water? (Mêti to hudôr dunatai kôlûsai tis?). The negative mêti expects the answer No. The evidence was indisputable that these Gentiles were converted and so were entitled to be baptized. See the similar idiom in Luke 6:39. Note the article with "water." Here the baptism of the Holy Spirit had preceded the baptism of water (Acts 1:5; Acts 11:16). "The greater had been bestowed; could the lesser be withheld?" (Knowling). That these should not be baptized (tou mê baptisthênai toutous). Ablative case of the articular first aorist passive infinitive of baptizô with the redundant negative after the verb of hindering (kôlûsai) and the accusative of general reference (toutous). The redundant negative after the verb of hindering is not necessary though often used in ancient Greek and in the Koin, (papyri). Without it see Mat 19:14; Acts 8:36 and with it see Luke 4:42; Luke 24:16; Acts 14:18. Cf. Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1061, 1094, 1171. The triple negatives here are a bit confusing to the modern mind (mêti in the question, kôlûsai, to hinder or to cut off, mê with baptisthênai). Literally, Can any one cut off the water from the being baptized as to these? Meyer: "The water is in this animated language conceived as the element offering itself for the baptism." As well as we (hôs kai hêmeis). The argument was conclusive. God had spoken. Note the query of the eunuch to Philip (Acts 8:36).

Verse 48

Commanded (prosetaxen). First aorist active indicative. Peter himself abstained from baptizing on this occasion (cf. Paul in 1Co 1:14). Evidently it was done by the six Jewish brethren. Them to be baptized (autous baptisthênai). Accusative of general reference with the first aorist passive infinitive. In the name of Jesus Christ (en tôi onomati Iêsou Christou). The essential name in Christian baptism as in Acts 2:38; Acts 19:5. But these passages give the authority for the act, not the formula that was employed (Alvah Hovey in Hackett's Commentary. See also chapter on the Baptismal Formula in my The Christ of the Logia). "Golden days" (aurei dies, Bengel) were these for the whole group.

Verse 1

In Judea (kata tên Ioudaian). Throughout Judea (probably all Palestine), distributive use of kata. The news from Caserea spread like wildfire among the Jewish Christians. The case of the Samaritans was different, for they were half Jews, though disliked. But here were real Romans even if with Jewish affinities. Had received (edexanto). First aorist middle indicative. The English idiom requires "had" received, the Greek has simply "received."

Verse 2

They that were of the circumcision (hoi ek peritomês). Literally, those of circumcision (on the side of circumcision, of the circumcision party). The phrase in Acts 10:46 is confined to the six brethren with Peter in Caesarea (Acts 11:12). That can hardly be the meaning here for it would mean that they were the ones who brought the charge against Peter though Hort takes this view. All the disciples in Jerusalem were Jews so that it can hardly mean the whole body. In Gal 2:12 the phrase has the narrower sense of the Judaizing or Pharisaic wing of the disciples (Acts 15:5) who made circumcision necessary for all Gentile converts. Probably here by anticipation Luke so describes the beginning of that great controversy. The objectors probably did not know of Peter's vision at Joppa, but only of the revolutionary conduct of Peter in Caesarea. These extremists who spoke probably had abundant sympathy in their protest. The apostles are mentioned in verse Acts 11:1, but are not referred to in verse Acts 11:2. Apparently they are in contrast with the circumcision party in the church. Contented (diekrinonto). Imperfect middle of the common verb diakrinô, to separate. Here to separate oneself apart (dia), to take sides against, to make a cleavage (dia, two, in two) as in Jude 1:9. So Peter is at once put on the defensive as the contention went on. It is plain that Peter was not regarded as any kind of pope or overlord.

Verse 3

Thou wentest in (eisêlthes). Direct form, but Westcott and Hort have it eisêlthen (he went in), indirect form. So with sunephages (didst eat) and sunephagen (did eat). The direct is more vivid. Men uncircumcised (andras akrobustian echontas). "Men having uncircumcision." It is a contemptuous expression. They did not object to Peter's preaching to the Gentiles, but to his going into the house of Cornelius and eating with them, violating his supposed obligations as a Jew (Hackett). It was the same complaint in principle that the Pharisees had made against Jesus when he ate with publicans and sinners (Luke 15:12). The Jews had not merely the Mosaic regulations about clean and unclean food, but also the fact that at a Gentile table some of the meat may have been an idol sacrifice. And Peter himself had similar scruples when the vision came to him at Joppa and when he entered the house of Cornelius in Caesarea Acts 10:28). Peter had been led beyond the circumcision party.

Verse 4

Began (arxamenos). Not pleonastic here, but graphically showing how Peter began at the beginning and gave the full story of God's dealings with him in Joppa and Caesarea. Expounded (exetitheto). Imperfect middle of ektithêmi, to set forth, old verb, but in the N.T. only in Acts (Acts 7:21; Acts 11:4; Acts 18:26; Acts 28:23), a deliberate and detailed narrative "in order" (kathexês). Old word for in succession. In the N.T. only in Luke 1:2; Luke 8:1; Acts 3:24; Acts 11:14; Acts 18:23. Luke evidently considered this defence of Peter important and he preserves the marks of authenticity. It came originally from Peter himself (verses Acts 11:5, 6, 15, 16). "The case of Cornelius was a test case of primary importance" (Page), "the first great difficulty of the early Church." Part of the story Luke gives three times (Acts 10:3-6, 30-32; Acts 11:13). See the discussion chapter 10 for details given here.

Verse 5

Let down (kathiemenên). Here agreeing with the "sheet" (othonên, feminine), not with "vessel" (skeuos, neuter) as in Acts 10:11. Even unto me (achri emou). Vivid detail added here by Peter.

Verse 6

When I had fastened my eyes (atenisas). This personal touch Peter adds from his own experience. See on Luke 4:20; see also Acts 3:4, 12 for this striking verb atenizô, to stretch the eyes towards, first aorist active participle here. I considered (kataneoô). Imperfect active of kataneoô to put the mind down on, to ponder, I was pondering. And saw (kai eidon). Second aorist active indicative, saw in a flash.

Verse 7

A voice saying (phônês legousês). Genitive case after êkousa (cf. Acts 9:7 and accusative Acts 9:4 which see for discussion). Participle legousês (present active of legô) agreeing with phônês, a kind of indirect discourse use of the participle.

Verse 8

Came into my mouth (eisêlthen eis to stoma mou). Instead of ephagon (I ate) in Acts 10:14. Different phrase for the same idea.

Verse 10

Was drawn up (anespsthê). Instead of anelêmphê (was taken up) in Acts 10:16. First aorist passive indicative of anaspao, old verb, but in N.T. only in Luke 14:5 and here.

Verse 12

Making no distinction (mêden diakrinanta). So Westcott and Hort (first aorist active participle) instead of mêden diakrinomenon "nothing doubting" (present middle participle) like Acts 10:20. The difference in voice shows the distinction in meaning. We entered into the man's house (eisêlthomen eis ton oikon tou andros). Peter confesses it, but shows that the other six went in also. He avoids mention of Cornelius's name and office.

Verse 13

Standing and saying (stathenta kai eiponta). More precisely, "stand and say" (punctiliar act, first aorist passive and second aorist active participles). Fetch Simon (metapempsai Simôna). First aorist middle imperative. Third time mentioned (Acts 10:5, 22; Acts 11:13). Perhaps Peter is anxious to make it plain that he did not go of his own initiative into the house of Cornelius. He went under God's direct orders.

Verse 14

Whereby thou shalt be saved, thou and all thy house (en hois sôthêsêi su kai pâs ho oikos sou). Future passive indicative of sôzô, to save. Clearly Cornelius was unsaved in spite of his interest in Jewish worship. Clearly also the household of Cornelius would likewise be won to Christ by the words of Simon Peter. This is household conversion before the household baptism (Acts 10:48; Acts 11:17).

Verse 15

As I began to speak (en tōi arxasthai me lalein). En with the locative of the articular aorist infinitive arxasthai (punctiliar action simply) and the accusative of general reference. The second infinitive lalein (to speak) is dependent on arxasthai, "In the beginning to speak as to me." Even as on us at the beginning (hōsper kai eph' hēmās en archēi). Peter recalls vividly the events at Pentecost, the speaking with tongues and all. It is noteworthy that Peter does not here repeat his sermon. "He rests his defence, not on what he said, but on what God did" (Furneaux).

Verse 16

I remembered (emnêsthên). First aorist passive indicative of the common verb mimnêskō, to remind. Peter recalls the very words of Jesus as reported in Acts 1:5. Peter now understands this saying of Jesus as he had not done before. That is a common experience with us all as new experiences of grace open richer veins in God's truth (John 12:16). Peter clearly sees that the water baptism is merely the symbol or picture of the spiritual baptism in the heart.

Verse 17

The like gift (tên isên dôrean). The equal gift, equal in quality, rank, or measure. Common word. When we believed (pisteusasîn). First aorist active participle of pisteuô in the dative case. It agrees both with hēmin (unto us) and with autois (unto them), "having believed on the Lord Jesus Christ." Both classes (Gentiles and Jews) trusted in Christ, and both received the Holy Spirit. Who was I (egō tis êmên). Note order, "I, who was I." "That I could withstand God" (dunatos kôlûsai ton theon). Literally, "able to withstand or hinder God." It is a rhetorical question, really two questions. Who was I? Was I able to hinder God? Peter's statement of the facts made an unanswerable defence. And yet Peter (Gal 2:11) will later in Antioch play the coward before emissaries from Jerusalem on this very point of eating with Gentile Christians.

Verse 18

Held their peace (hêsuchasan). Ingressive aorist active indicative of hêsuchazô, old verb to be quiet, to keep quiet. The wrangling (verse Acts 11:2) ceased. The critics even "glorified God" (edoxasan, ingressive aorist again). Then to the Gentiles also (Ara kai tois ethnesin). Ergo as in Luke 11:20, 48 and like ara oun in Rom 5:18. In ancient Greek inferential ara cannot come at the beginning of a clause as here. It was reluctant acquiescence in the undoubted fact that God had "granted repentance unto life" to these Gentiles in Caesarea, but the circumcision party undoubtedly looked on it as an exceptional case and not to be regarded as a precedent to follow with other Gentiles. Peter will see in this incident (Acts 15:8) the same principle for which Paul contends at the Jerusalem Conference. Furneaux suggests that this conduct of Peter in Caesarea, though grudgingly acquiesced in after his skilful defence, decreased his influence in Jerusalem where he had been leader and helped open the way for the leadership of James the Lord's brother.

Verse 19

They therefore that were scattered abroad (hoi men oun diasparentes). Precisely the same words used in Acts 8:4 about those scattered by Saul (which see) and a direct reference to it is made by the next words, "upon the tribulation that arose about Stephen" (apo tês thlipseôs tês genomenês epi Stephanôi). As a result of (apo), in the case of (epe) Stephen. From that event Luke followed Saul through his conversion and back to Jerusalem and to Tarsus. Then he showed the activity of Peter outside of Jerusalem as a result of the cessation of the persecution from the conversion of Saul with the Gentile Pentecost in Caesarea and the outcome in Jerusalem. Now Luke starts over again from the same persecution by Saul and runs a new line of events up to Antioch parallel to the other, probably partly following. Except to Jews only (ei mê monon Ioudaiois). Clearly these disciples did not know anything about the events in Caesarea and at first their flight preceded that time. But it was a wonderful episode, the eager and loyal preaching of the fleeing disciples. The culmination in Antioch was probably after the report of Peter about Caesarea. This Antioch by the Orontes was founded 300 B.C. by Seleucus Nicator and was one of five cities so named by the Seleucides. It became the metropolis of Syria though the Arabs held Damascus first. Antioch ranked next to Rome and Alexandria in size, wealth, power, and vice. There were many Jews in the cosmopolitan population of half a million. It was destined to supplant Jerusalem as the centre of Christian activity.

Spake (elaloun). Inchoative imperfect active, began to speak. For them it was an experiment. Unto the Greeks also (kai pros tous Hellênas). This is undoubtedly the correct reading in spite of Hellenists (Hellênistas) or Grecian Jews in B E H L P. Hellênas is read by A and D and a corrector of Aleph. The presence of "also" or "even" (kai) in Aleph A B makes no sense unless "Greeks" is correct. Hellenists or Grecian Jews as Christians were common enough as is seen in Acts 2; Acts 6:1. Saul also had preached to the Hellenists in Jerusalem (Acts 9:29). Hellenists were merely one kind of Jews in contrast with those who spoke Aramaic (Acts 6:1). It is true that the case of Cornelius was first in importance, but it is not clear that it was before the work in Antioch. Probably the report of the work among the Greeks in Antioch reached Jerusalem after Peter's defence in Acts 11:1-18. That explains the calm tone about it and also why Barnabas and not Peter was sent to investigate. Peter and John (Acts 8:1) had condoned Philip's work in Samaria and Peter was the agent in the work among the Romans in Caesarea. His position was now well-known and his services discounted for this new crisis. These Greeks in Antioch were apparently in part pure heathen and not "God-fearers" like Cornelius. A man of wisdom was called for. These preachers were themselves Hellenists (verse Acts 11:19) and open to the lessons from their environment without a vision such as Peter had at Joppa. "It was a departure of startling boldness" (Furneaux) by laymen outside of the circle of official leaders.

Verse 21

The hand of the Lord was with them (ên cheir kuriou met' autôn). This O.T. phrase (Ex 9:3; Isa 59:1) is used by Luke (Luke 1:66; Acts 4:28, 30; Acts 13:11). It was proof of God's approval of their course in preaching the Lord Jesus to Greeks. Turned unto the Lord (epestrepsen epi ton kurion). First aorist active indicative of epistrepô, common verb to turn. The usual expression for Gentiles turning to the true God (Acts 14:15; Acts 15:3, 19; Acts 26:18, 20; 1Th 1:9). Here "Lord" refers to "the Lord Jesus" as in verse Acts 11:20, though "the hand of the Lord" is the hand of Jehovah, clearly showing that the early disciples put Jesus on a par with Jehovah. His deity was not a late development read back into the early history.

Verse 22

Came to the ears (ékousthê eis ta ôta). First aorist passive indicative of akouô, was heard in the ears. Of the church which was in Jerusalem (tês ekklêsias tês en Ierousalêm). Not yet was the term "church" applied to the group of disciples in Antioch as it is in Acts 11:26; Acts 13:1. They sent forth (exapesteilan). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb ex-apo-stellô, to send out and away. The choice of Barnabas was eminently wise. He already had a position of leadership in Jerusalem because of his generosity (Acts 4:36) and his championship of Saul after his conversion (Acts 9:27). He was originally from Cyprus and probably had personal friends among some of the leaders in this new movement. He was to investigate the work of the travelling preachers (verse Acts 11:19) all the way to Antioch (heôs Antiocheias).

Verse 23

The grace of God, was glad (tên charin tèn tou theou echarê). Note repetition of the article, "the grace that of God." The verb (second aorist passive indicative of chairô) has the same root as charis. See the same suavis paronomasia in Luke 1:28. "Grace brings gladness" (Page). "A smaller man would have raised difficulties as to circumcision or baptism" (Furneaux). He exhorted (parekalei). Imperfect active, picturing the continuous encouragement from Barnabas. With purpose of heart (têi prothesei tês kardias). Placing before (from pro-tithêmi), old word for set plan as in Acts 27:13; Rom 8:28. The glow of the first enthusiasm might pass as often happens after a revival. Barnabas had a special gift (Acts 4:36) for work like this. Cleave unto the Lord (prosmenein [en] tôi kuriôi). Dative case (locative if en is genuine) of kurios (here Jesus again) after prosmenein to keep on remaining loyal to (present active infinitive). Persistence was needed in such a pagan city.

Verse 24

For (hoti). Because. This is the explanation of the conduct of Barnabas. The facts were opposed to the natural prejudices of a Jew like Barnabas, but he rose above such racial narrowness. He was a really good man (agathos). See Rom 5:7 for distinction between agathos and dikaios, righteous, where agathos ranks higher than dikaios. Besides, Barnabas was full of the Holy Spirit (like Peter) and of faith and so willing to follow the leading of God's Spirit and take some risks. This is a noble tribute paid by Luke. One wonders if Barnabas was still living when he wrote this. Certainly he was not prejudiced against Barnabas though he will follow the fortunes of Paul after the separation (Acts 15:36; Acts 15:41). Was added unto the Lord (prosetethê tôi kuriôi). First aorist passive indicative of prostithêmi, common verb to add to. These people were added to the Lord Jesus before they were added to the church. If that were always true, what a difference it would make in our churches.

Verse 25

To seek for Saul (anazêtêsai Saulon). First aorist (effective) active infinitive of purpose. Anazêteô is a common verb since Plato, but in the N.T. only here and Luke 2:44, 45, to seek up and down (ana), back and forth, to hunt up, to make a thorough search till success comes. It is plain from Gal 1:21 that Saul had not been idle in Cilicia. Tarsus was not very far from Antioch. Barnabas probably knew that Saul was a vessel of choice (Acts 9:15) by Christ for the work among the Gentiles. He knew, of course, of Saul's work with the Hellenists in Jerusalem (Acts 9:29) and echoes of his work in Cilicia and Syria had probably come to him. So to Tarsus he goes when he saw the need for help. "He had none of the littleness which cannot bear the presence of a possible rival" (Furneaux). Barnabas knew his own limitations and knew where the man of destiny for this crisis was, the man who already had the seal of God upon him. The hour and the man met when Barnabas brought Saul to Antioch. The door was open and the man was ready, far more ready than when Jesus called him on the road to Damascus. The years in Cilicia and Syria were not wasted for they had not been idle. If we only knew the facts, it is probable that Saul also had been preaching to Hellenes as well as to Hellenists. Jesus had definitely called him to work among the Gentiles (Acts 9:15). In his own way he had come to the same place that Peter reached in Caesarea and that Barnabas now holds in Antioch. God always has a man prepared for a great emergency in the kingdom. The call of Barnabas was simply the repetition of the call of Christ. So Saul came.

Even for a whole year (kai eniauton holon). Accusative of extent of time, probably the year A.D. 44, the year preceding the visit to Jerusalem (Acts 11:30), the year of the famine. The preceding years with Tarsus as headquarters covered A.D. 37 (39) to 44. They were gathered together with the church (sunachthênai en têi ekklêsiâi). First aorist passive infinitive of sunagô, old verb, probably here to meet together as in Mat 28:12. In Acts 14:27 the verb is used of gathering together the church, but here en têi ekklêsiâi excludes that idea. Barnabas met together "in the church" (note first use of the word for the disciples at Antioch). This peculiar phrase accents the leadership and co-operation of Barnabas and Saul in teaching (didaxai, first aorist active infinitive) much people. Both infinitives are in the nominative case, the subject of egeneto (it came to pass). And that the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch (chrêmatisai te prôtôs en Antiocheiâi tous mathêtas Christianous). This first active infinitive chrêmatisai is also a subject of egeneto and is added as a separate item by the use of te rather than kai. For the word itself in the sense of divine command see on Mat 2:12, 22; Luke 2:26; Acts 10:22. Here and in Rom 7:3 it means to be called or named (assuming a name from one's business, chrêma, from chraomai, to use or to do business). Polybius uses it in this sense as here. Tous mathêtas (the disciples) is in the accusative of general reference with the infinitive. Christianous (Christians) is simply predicate accusative. This word is made after the pattern of Herodianus (Mat 22:16, Herôidianoï, followers of Herod), Caesarianus, a follower of Caesar (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, p. 377, gives papyri examples of the genitive Kaisaros meaning also "belonging to Caesar" like the common adjective Caesarianus). It is made thus like a Latin adjective, though it is a Greek word, and it refers to the Hebrew belief in a Messiah (Page). The name was evidently given to the followers of Christ by the Gentiles to distinguish them from the Jews since they were Greeks, not Grecian Jews. The Jews would not call them Christians because of their own use of Christos the Messiah. The Jews termed them Galileans or Nazarenes. The followers of Christ called themselves disciples (learners), believers, brethren, saints, those of the Way. The three uses of Christian in the N.T. are from the heathen standpoint (here), Acts 26:28 (a term of contempt in the mouth of Agrippa), and 1Pe 4:16 (persecution from the Roman government). It is a clear distinction from both Jews and Gentiles and it is not strange that it came into use first here in Antioch when the large Greek church gave occasion for it. Later Ignatius was bishop in Antioch and was given to the lions in Rome, and John Chrysostom preached here his wonderful sermons.

Verse 27

Prophets (prophêtai). Christian prophets these were (cf. Acts 13:1) who came from Jerusalem (the headquarters, Acts 8:15). Judas and Silas are called prophets (Acts 14:4; Acts 15:32). They were not just fore-tellers, but forth-tellers. The prophet had inspiration and was superior to the speaker with tongues (1Co 14:3). John was a prophet (Luke 7:26). We need prophets in the ministry today.

Verse 28

Signified (esêmainen). Imperfect active in Westcott and Hort, but aorist active esêmânên in the margin. The verb is an old one from sêma (sêmeion) a sign (cf. the symbolic sign in Acts 21:11). Here Agabus (also in Acts 21:10) does predict a famine through the Holy Spirit. Should be (mellein esesthai). Mellô occurs either with the present infinitive (Acts 16:27), the aorist infinitive (Acts 12:6), or the future as here and Acts 24:15; Acts 27:10. Over all the world

(eph' holên tèn oikoumenên). Over all the inhabited earth (gên, understood). Probably a common hyperbole for the Roman empire as in Luke 2:1. Josephus (Ant. VIII. 13, 4) appears to restrict it to Palestine. In the days of Claudius (epi Klaudiou). He was Roman Emperor A.D. 41-44. The Roman writers (Suetonius, Dio Cassius, Tacitus) all tell of dearths (assiduae sterilitates) during the brief reign of Claudius who was preceded by Caligula and followed by Nero.

Verse 29

Every man according to his ability (kathôs euporeito tis). Imperfect middle of euporeô, to be well off (from euporos), old verb, but here alone in the N.T., "as any one was well off." The sentence is a bit tangled in the Greek from Luke's rush of ideas. Literally, "Of the disciples, as any one was able (or well off), they determined (hôrisan, marked off the horizon) each of them to send relief (eis diakonian, for ministry) to the brethren who dwelt in Judaea." The worst of the famine came A.D. 45. The warning by Agabus stirred the brethren in Antioch to send the collection on ahead.

Verse 30

Sending (aposteilantes). First aorist active participle of apostellô, coincident action with epoiêsan (did). To the elders (pros tous presbuteros). The first use of that term for the Christian preachers. In Acts 20:17, 28 "elders" and "bishops" are used interchangeably as in Tit 1:5, 7. The term probably arose gradually and holds a position in the church similar to the same term in the synagogue. The apostles were apparently absent from Jerusalem at this time and they were no longer concerned with serving tables. In Acts 21:18 Paul presented the later collection also to the elders. Since Peter and James (till his death) were in Jerusalem during the persecution in chapter 12 it is probable that the visit of Barnabas and Saul to Jerusalem came really after that persecution for Peter left Jerusalem (Acts 12:17). The elders here mentioned may include the preachers in Judea also outside of Jerusalem (Acts 26:20).

Verse 1

About that time (kat' ekeinon ton kairon). Same phrase in Rom 9:9. That is, the early part of A.D. 44 since that is the date of Herod's death. As already suggested, Barnabas and Saul came down from Antioch to Jerusalem after the persecution by Herod at the end of 44 or the beginning of 45. Herod the king (Hêrôidês ho basileus). Accurate title at this particular time. Herod Agrippa I, grandson of Herod the Great, was King of Palestine A.D. 42 to 44; only for these three years was a Herod king over Palestine since the death of Herod the Great and never afterwards. Archelaus never actually became king though he had the popular title at first (Mat 2:22). Put forth his hands (epebalen tas cheiras). Second aorist active indicative of epiballô, old verb, to cast upon or against. The same idiom with tas cheiras (the hands, common Greek idiom with article rather than possessive pronoun) in Acts 4:3; Acts 5:18. To afflict (kakôsai). First aorist active infinitive of kakoô, old word to do harm or evil to (kakos), already in Acts 7:6, 19. Outside of Acts in the N.T. only 1Pe 5:13. Infinitive of purpose. Probably the first who were afflicted were scourged or imprisoned, not put to death. It had been eight years or more since the persecution over the death of Stephen ceased with the conversion of Saul. But the disciples were not popular in Jerusalem with either Sadducees or Pharisees. The overtures to the Gentiles in Caesarea and Antioch may have stirred up the Pharisees afresh (cf. Acts 6:14). Herod Agrippa I was an Idumean through his grandfather Herod the Great and a grandson of Mariamne the Maccabean princess. He was a favourite of Caligula the Roman Emperor and was anxious to placate his Jewish subjects while retaining the favour of the Romans. So he built theatres and held games for the Romans and Greeks and slew the Christians to please the Jews. Josephus (Ant. XIX. 7, 3) calls him a pleasant vain man scrupulously observing Jewish rites. Here we have for the first time political power (after Pilate) used against the disciples.

James the brother of John (Iakôbon ton adelphon Iôanou). He had been called by Jesus a son of thunder along with his brother John.

Jesus had predicted a bloody death for both of them (Mark 10:38; Mat 20:23). James is the first of the apostles to die and John probably the last. He is not James the Lord's brother (Gal 1:19). We do not know why Luke tells so little about the death of James and so much about the death of Stephen nor do we know why Herod selected him as a victim. Eusebius (H.E. ii. 9) quotes Clement of Alexandria as saying that a Jew made accusations against James and was converted and beheaded at the same time with him. Killed with the sword (aneilen machairêi). The verb is a favourite one with Luke (Acts 2:33; Acts 5:33, 36; Acts 7:28; Acts 9:23-29; Acts 10:39, etc.). Instrumental case and Ionic form of machaira. The Jews considered beheading a shameful death as in the case of the Baptist (Mat 14:10).

Verse 3

That it pleased the Jews (hoti areston estin tois Ioudaiois). Indirect assertion with the present tense estin retained. Areston is the verbal adjective from areskô followed by the dative as in John 8:29. Proceeded to seize (prosetheto sullabein). A patent Hebraism in Luke 20:11 already, and nowhere else in the N.T. It occurs in the LXX (Gen 4:2; Gen 8:12; Gen 18:29, etc.). Second aorist middle indicative of prostithêmi and the second aorist active infinitive of sullambanô. Literally, he added to seize, he seized Peter in addition to James. The days of unleavened bread (hêmerai tôn azumôn). By this parenthesis Luke locates the time of the year when Peter was arrested, the passover. It was a fine occasion for Agrippa to increase his favour among the crowds of Jews there by extra zeal against the Christians. It is possible that Luke obtained his information about this incident from John Mark for at his Mother's house the disciples gathered (Acts 12:12).

When he had taken him (piasas). See on Acts 3:7 for same form. He put him in prison (etheto eis phulakên). Second aorist middle indicative of tithêmi, common verb. This is the third imprisonment of Peter (Acts 4:3; Acts 5:18). To four quaternions of soldiers (tessarsin tetradiois stratiôtôn). Four soldiers in each quaternion (tetradion from tetras, four), two on the inside with the prisoner (chained to him) and two on the outside, in shifts of six hours each, sixteen soldiers in all, the usual Roman custom. Probably Agrippa had heard of Peter's previous escape (Acts 5:19) and so took no chances for connivance of the jailors. After the passover (meta to pascha). The passover feast of eight days. "The stricter Jews regarded it as a profanation to put a person to death during a religious festival" (Hackett). So Agrippa is more scrupulous than the Sanhedrin was about Jesus. To bring him forth (anagagein auton). Second aorist active infinitive of anagô, to lead up, old verb, used literally here. Peter was in the inner prison or lower ward and so would be led up to the judgment seat where Herod Agrippa would sit (cf. John 19:13). To the people (tôi laôi). Ethical dative, in the presence of and for the pleasure of the Jewish people.

Verse 5

Therefore (men oun). Because of the preceding situation. Was kept (etêreito). Imperfect passive, continuously guarded, waiting for the feast to be over. But prayer was made earnestly (proseuchê de ên ektenôs ginomenê). Probably de here is not adversative (but), merely parallel (and) as Page argues. It was a crisis for the Jerusalem church. James had been slain and Peter was to be the next victim. Hence "earnestly" (late adverb from ektenês, strained, from ekteinô, to stretch. In the N.T. only here, Luke 22:44; 1Pe 1:22) prayer was going up (ginomenê, present middle participle, periphrastic imperfect with ên). It looked like a desperate case for Peter. Hence the disciples prayed the more earnestly.

Verse 6

Was about to bring him forth (êmellen prosagagein or proagagein). The MSS. vary, but not anagagein of verse Acts 12:4. The same night (têi nukti ekeinêi). Locative case, on that (very) night. Was sleeping (ên koimômenos). Periphrastic middle imperfect. Bound with two chains (dedemenos halusesin dusin). Perfect passive participle of deô, to bind, followed by instrumental case. One chain was fastened to each soldier (one on each side of Peter). Kept (etêroun). Imperfect active, were keeping. Two guards outside before the door and two inside, according to Roman rule. Did Peter recall the prophecy of Jesus that he should be put to death in his old age (John 21:18)? Jesus had not said, as Furneaux does, that he would die by crucifixion.

Verse 7

Stood by him (epestê). Ingressive second aorist active indicative of ephistêmi, intransitive. This very form occurs in Luke 2:9 of the sudden appearance of the angel of the Lord to the shepherds. Page notes that this second aorist of ephistêmi occurs seven times in the Gospel of Luke, eight times in the Acts, and nowhere else in the N.T. Note also the same form apestê (departed from, from aphistêmi, stood off from) of the disappearance of the angel in verse Acts 12:10. In the cell (en tōi oikêmati). Literally, a dwelling place or habitation (from oikeō, to dwell, oikos, house), but here not the prison as a whole as in Thucydides, but the room in the prison (cell) where Peter was chained to the two guards. Old word, but only here in the N.T. He smote Peter on the side (pataxas tēn pleuran tou Petrou). More exactly, "smote the side of Peter." Strongly enough to wake Peter up who was sound asleep and yet not rouse the two guards. It was probably between 3 A.M. and 6 A.M., hours when changes in the guards were made. Rise up (anasta). Short form (Koin.) of anastêthi, second aorist active imperative of anistêmi, intransitive. So also Acts 9:11 (Westcott and Hort text); Eph 5:14. Fell off (exepesan). Second aorist active with a ending like first aorist of exiptō, old verb. This miracle was necessary if Peter was to escape without rousing the two guards.

Verse 8

Gird thyself (zōsai). Direct middle first aorist (ingressive) imperative (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 806f.) from zōnnumi (zōnnuō). Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and John 21:18 (twice to Peter) where the active voice and the reflexive pronoun occur in the first example. The girdle was worn round the chitōn or undergarment. Bind on (hupodêsai). Indirect middle (by yourself or for yourself) first aorist imperative of hupodeō, to bind under, old verb, only three times in the N.T. (Mark 6:9; Acts 12:8; Eph 6:15 (middle)). Sandals (sandalia). Persian word common from Herodotus on, a sole made of wood or leather covering the bottom of the foot and bound on with thongs. In the N.T. only here and Mark 6:9. In the LXX used indiscriminately with hupodêma. Cast about thee (peribalou). Second aorist middle (indirect) imperative of periballô, old and common verb to throw around, especially clothing around the body as here. The himation (outer garment) was put over the chitôn. It was not a hurried flight. Follow me (akolouthei moi). Present (linear) active imperative, keep on following me (associative instrumental case).

Verse 9

Wist not (ouk êidei). Past perfect of oida used as imperfect, did not know. Followed (êkolouthei). Imperfect active, kept on following as the angel had directed (verse Acts 12:8). That it was true (hoti alêthes estin). Indirect assertion and so present tense retained. Note "true" (alêthes) in the sense of reality or actuality. Which was done (to ginomenon). Present middle participle, that which was happening. Thought he saw a vision (edokei horama blepein). Imperfect active, kept on thinking, puzzled as he was. Blepein is the infinitive in indirect assertion without the pronoun (he) expressed which could be either nominative in apposition with the subject as in Rom 1:22 or accusative of general reference as in Acts 5:36; Acts 8:9 (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1036-40). Peter had had a vision in Joppa (Acts 10:10) which Luke describes as an "ecstasy," but here is objective fact, at least Luke thought so and makes that distinction. Peter will soon know whether he is still in the cell or not as we find out that a dream is only a dream when we wake up.

Verse 10

When they were past (dialthontes). Second aorist active participle of dierchomai, transitive with dia in composition. The first and the second ward (prôtên phulakên kai deuteran). It is not clear to what this language refers. Some take it to mean single soldiers, using phulakên in the sense of a guard (one before the door, one at the iron gate). But it seems hardly likely that the two soldiers with whom Peter had been stationed are meant. Probably the "first ward" means the two soldiers of the quaternion stationed by the door and the second ward some other soldiers, not part of the sixteen, further on in the prison by the iron gate. However understood, the difficulties of escape are made plain. Unto the iron gate that leadeth into the city (epi tên pulên tên sidêrân tên pherousan eis tên polin). Note the triple use of the article (the gate the iron one the one leading into the city). For this resumptive use of the article see Robertson, Grammar, pp. 762, 764. This iron gate may have opened from a court out into the street and effectually barred escape. Opened to them (ênoigê autois). Second aorist passive indicative of anoigô, the usual later form though ênoichthê (first aorist passive) occurs also, was opened. Of its own accord (automatê). Old compound adjective (autos, self, obsolete maô, to desire eagerly, feminine form though masculine automatos also used as feminine). In the N.T. only here and Mark 4:28. It was a strange experience for Peter. The Codex Bezae adds here "went down the seven steps" (katebêsan tous hepta bathmous), an interesting detail that adds to the picture. One street (rhumên mian). The angel saw Peter through one of the narrow streets and then left him. We have no means of knowing precisely the location of the prison in the city. On "departed" (apestê) see on verse Acts 12:7.

Verse 11

Was come to himself (en heautôi genomenos). Second aorist middle participle of ginomai with en and the locative case, "becoming at himself." In Luke 15:17 we have eis heauton elthôn (coming to himself, as if he had been on a trip away from himself). Now I know of a truth (nun oida alêthôs). There was no further confusion of mind that it was an ecstasy as in Acts 10:10. But he was in peril for the soldiers would soon learn of his escape, when the change of guards came at 6 A.M. Delivered me (exeilato me). Second aorist middle indicative of exaireô. The Lord rescued me of himself by his angel. Expectation (prosdokias). Old word from prosdokaô, to look for. In the N.T. only here and Luke 21:26. James had been put to death and the Jewish people were eagerly waiting for the execution of Peter like hungry wolves.

Verse 12

When he had considered (sunidôn). Second aorist active participle of suneidon (for the defective verb sunoraô), to see together, to grasp as a whole, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 14:6, save the perfect indicative sunoida (1Co 4:4) and participle (Acts

5:2). It is the word from which suneidêsis (conscience) comes (Rom 2:15). Peter's mind worked rapidly and he decided what to do. He took in his situation clearly. To the house of Mary (epi tēn oikian tēs Marias). Another Mary (the others were Mary the mother of Jesus, Mary of Bethany, Mary Magdalene, Mary wife of Cleopas, Mary the mother of James and Joses). She may have been a widow and was possessed of some means since her house was large enough to hold the large group of disciples there. Barnabas, cousin of John Mark her son (Col 4:10), was also a man of property or had been (Acts 4:36). It is probable that the disciples had been in the habit of meeting in her house, a fact known to Peter and he was evidently fond of John Mark whom he afterwards calls "my son" (1Pe 5:13) and whom he had met here. The upper room of Acts 1:13 may have been in Mary's house and Mark may have been the man bearing a pitcher of water (Luke 22:10) and the young man who fled in the Garden of Gethsemane (Mark 14:51). There was a gate and portress here as in the house of the highpriest (John 18:16). Peter knew where to go and even at this early hour hoped to find some of the disciples. Mary is one of the many mothers who have become famous by reason of their sons, though she was undoubtedly a woman of high character herself. Were gathered together and were praying (êsan sunêthroismenoi kai proseuchomenoi). Note difference in the tenses, one periphrastic past perfect passive (sunathroizô old verb, in the N.T. here only and Acts 19:25 and the uncompounded throizô in Luke 24:33) and the periphrastic imperfect. The praying apparently had been going on all night and a large number (many, hikanoi) of the disciples were there. One recalls the time when they had gathered to pray (Acts 4:31) after Peter had told the disciples of the threats of the Sanhedrin (Acts 4:23). God had rescued Peter then. Would he let him be put to death now as James had been?

Verse 13

When he knocked at the door of the gate (krousantos autou tēn thuran tou pulônos). Genitive absolute with aorist active participle of krouô, common verb to knock or knock at. So from the outside (Luke 13:25). Pulôn here is the gateway or passageway from the door (thura) that leads to the house. In verse Acts 12:14 it is still the passageway without the use of thura (door, so for both door and passageway). To answer (hupakousai). To listen under before opening. First aorist active infinitive of hupakouô, common verb to obey, to hearken. A maid (paidiskê). Portress as in John 18:17. A diminutive of pais, a female slave (so on an ostrakon of second century A.D., Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, p. 200). Rhoda. A rose. Women can have such beautiful names like Dorcas (Gazelle), Euodia (Sweet Aroma), Syntyche (Good Luck). Mark or Peter could tell Luke her name.

Verse 14

When she knew (epignousa). Second aorist (ingressive) active participle of epiginôskô, to know fully or in addition (epi), to recognize. She knew Peter and his voice from his frequent visits there. For joy (apo tês charâs). From her joy (ablative case), life-like picture of the maid who left Peter standing outside with the door to the passageway unopened. Note the aorist tenses for quick action (ouk ênoixen), eisdramousa (from eistrechô, defective verb, only here in the N.T.), apêggeilen. Stood (hestanai). Second perfect active infinitive of histêmi, intransitive, in indirect assertion with ton Petron (Peter) accusative of general reference. The slave girl acted as if she were a member of the family (Furneaux), but she left Peter in peril.

Verse 15

Thou art mad (mainêi). Present middle indicative second person singular. Old verb, only in the middle voice. Festus used the same word to Paul (Acts 26:24). The maid was undoubtedly excited, but it was a curious rebuff from those who had been praying all night for Peter's release. In their defence it may be said that Stephen and James had been put to death and many others by Saul's persecution. She confidently affirmed (diischurizeto). Imperfect middle of diischurizomai, an old word of vigorous and confident assertion, originally to lean upon. Only here in the N.T. The girl stuck to her statement. It is his angel (Ho aggelos estin autou). This was the second alternative of the disciples. It was a popular Jewish belief that each man had a guardian angel. Luke takes no position about it. No scripture teaches it.

Verse 16

Continued knocking (epemenen krouôn). Imperfect active and present participle. Now all heard the knocking. When they had opened (anoixantes). First aorist active participle of anoigô or -numi. The whole group rushed out to the courtyard this time to make sure. They were amazed (exestêsan). The frequent second aorist active (intransitive) indicative of existêmi.

Verse 17

There were probably loud exclamations of astonishment and joy. Beckoning with the hand (kataseisas têi cheiri). First aorist active participle of kataseiô, old verb to signal or shake down with the hand (instrumental case cheiri). In the N.T. only in Acts 12:17; Acts 13:16; Acts 19:33; Acts 21:40. The speaker indicates by a downward movement of the hand his desire for silence (to hold their peace, sigâin, present active infinitive, to keep silent). Peter was anxious for every precaution and he wanted their instant attention. Declared (diêgêsato). First aorist middle of diêgeomai, old verb to carry through a narrative, give a full story. See also Acts 9:27 of Barnabas in his defence of Saul. Peter told them the wonderful story. Unto James and the brethren (Iakôbôi kai tois adelphois). Dative case after apaggeilate (first aorist active imperative). Evidently "James and the brethren" were not at this meeting, probably meeting elsewhere. There was no place where all the thousands of disciples in Jerusalem could meet. This gathering in the house of Mary may have been of women only or a meeting of the Hellenists. It is plain that this James the Lord's brother, is now the leading presbyter or elder in Jerusalem though there were a number (Acts 11:30; Acts 21:18). Paul even terms him apostle (Gal 1:19), though certainly not one of the twelve. The twelve apostles probably were engaged elsewhere in mission work save James now dead (Acts 12:2) and Peter. The leadership of James is here recognized by Peter and is due, partly to the absence of the twelve, but mainly to his own force of character. He will preside over the Jerusalem Conference (Acts 15:13). To another place (eis heteron topon). Probably Luke did not know the place and certainly it was prudent for Peter to conceal it from Herod Agrippa. Probably Peter left the city. He is back in Jerusalem at the Conference a few years later (Acts 15:7) and after the death of Herod Agrippa. Whether Peter went to Rome during these years we do not know. He was recognized later as the apostle to the circumcision (Gal 2:7; 1Pe 1:1) and apparently was in Rome with John Mark when he wrote the First Epistle (1Pe 5:13), unless it is the real Babylon. But, even if Peter went to Rome during this early period, there is no evidence that he founded the church there. If he had done so, in the light of 2Co 10:16 it would be strange that Paul had not mentioned it in writing to Rome, for he was anxious not to build on another man's foundation (Rom 15:20). Paul felt sure that he himself had a work to do in Rome. Unfortunately Luke has not followed the ministry of Peter after this period as he does Paul (appearing again only in chapter Acts 15:1). If Peter really left Jerusalem at this time instead of hiding in the city, he probably did some mission work as Paul says that he did (1Co 9:5).

Verse 18

As soon as it was day (Genomenês hêmeras). Genitive absolute, day having come. No small stir (tarachos ouk oligos). Litotes (ouk oligos), occurs eight times in the Acts as in Acts 15:2, and nowhere else in the N.T. Tarachos (stir) is an old word from tarassô, to agitate. In the N.T. only here and Acts 19:23. Probably all sixteen soldiers were agitated over this remarkable escape. They were responsible for the prisoner with their lives (cf. Acts 16:27; Acts 27:42). Furneaux suggests that Manaen, the king's foster-brother and a Christian (Acts 13:1), was the "angel" who rescued Peter from the prison. That is not the way that Peter looked at it. What was become of Peter (ti ara ho Petros egeneto). An indirect question with the aorist indicative retained. Ara adds a syllogism (therefore) to the problem as in Luke 1:66. The use of the neuter ti (as in Acts 13:25) is different from tis, though nominative like Petros, literally, "what then Peter had become," "what had happened to Peter" (in one idiom). See the same idiom in John 21:21 (houtos de ti). But this one what (verb genêsetai not used).

Verse 19

He examined (anakrinas). First aorist active participle of anakrinô, old verb to sift up and down, to question thoroughly, in a forensic sense (Luke 23:14; Acts 4:9; Acts 12:19; Acts 28:18). That they should be put to death (apachthênai). First aorist passive infinitive (indirect command) of apagô, old verb to lead away, especially to execution as in Mat 27:31. Here it is used absolutely. This was the ordinary Roman routine and not a proof of special cruelty on the part of Herod Agrippa. Tarried (dietriben). Imperfect active. Herod Agrippa made his home in Jerusalem, but he went to Caesarea to the public games in honour of Emperor Claudius.

Verse 20

Was highly displeased (ên thumomachôn). Periphrastic imperfect active of thumomacheô, late compound of thumos (passionate heat) and machomai, to fight. Only here in the N.T., to fight desperately, to have a hot quarrel. Whether it was open war with the Phoenicians or just violent hostility we do not know, save that Phoenicia belonged to Syria and Herod Agrippa had no authority there. The quarrel may have been over commercial matters. They came with one accord (homothumadon parêsan). The representatives of Tyre and Sidon. See on Acts 1:14 for homothumadon. Tyre was a colony of Sidon and had become one of the chief commercial cities of the world by reason of the Phoenician ships. The king's chamberlain (ton epi tou koitônou tou basileos). The one over the bedchamber (koitônou, late word from koitê, bed, here only in the N.T.). Made their friend (peisantes). First aorist active participle of peithô, to persuade. Having persuaded (probably with bribes as in Mat 28:14). They asked for peace (êitounto eirênên). Imperfect middle of aiteô, kept on asking for peace. Because their country was fed (dia to trephesthai autôn tèn choran). Causal sentence with dia and the articular infinitive (present passive of trephô, to nourish or feed) and the accusative of general reference, "because of the being fed as to their country." Tyre and Sidon as large commercial cities on the coast received large supplies of grain and fruits from Palestine. Herod had cut off the supplies and that brought the two cities to action.

Verse 21

Upon a set day (taktêi hêmerâi). Locative case and the verbal adjective of tassô, to arrange, appoint, old word, here only in the N.T. Josephus (Ant. XVII. 6, 8; XIX. 8, 2) gives a full account of the occasion and the death of Herod Agrippa. It was the second day of the festival in honour of the Emperor Claudius, possibly his birthday rather than the Quinquennalia. The two accounts of Luke and Josephus supplement each other with no contradiction. Josephus does not mention the name of Blastus. Arrayed himself in royal apparel (endusamenos esthêta basilikên). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of endunô or enduô, common verb to put on. Literally, having put royal apparel on himself (a robe of silver tissue, Josephus says). The rays of the sun shone on this brilliant apparel and the vast crowd in the open amphitheatre became excited as Herod began to speak. Made an oration (edêmêgorei). Imperfect active of dêmêgoreô, old verb from dêmêgoros (haranguer of the people), and that from dêmos (people) and agoreuô, to harangue or address the people. Only here in the N.T. He kept it up.

Verse 22

Shouted (epephônei). Imperfect active, kept on shouting, calling out to him. Old verb, but only four times in the N.T. and all by Luke. The heathen crowd (dêmos) repeated their flattering adulation to gain Herod's favour. The voice of a god (theou phônê). In the pagan sense of emperor worship, not as the Supreme Being. But it was pleasing to Herod Agrippa's vanity.

Verse 23

Smote him (epataxen auton). Effective aorist active indicative of patassô, old verb, used already in verse Acts 12:7 of gentle smiting of the angel of the Lord, here of a severe stroke of affliction. Like Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:30) pride went before a fall. He was struck down in the very zenith of his glory. Because (anth' hôn). Anti with the genitive of the relative pronoun, "in return for which things." He accepted the impious flattery (Hackett) instead of giving God the glory. He was a nominal Jew. He was eaten of worms (genomenos skôlêkobrôtos). Ingressive aorist middle participle, "becoming worm-eaten." The compound verbal adjective (skôlêx, worm, brôtos, eaten, from bibrôskô) is a late word (II Macc. 9:9) of the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, used also of a tree (Theophrastus), here only in the N.T. The word skôlêx was used of intestinal worms and Herodotus (IV. 205) describes Pheretima, Queen of Cyrene, as having swarms of worms which ate her flesh while still alive. Josephus (Ant. XIX. 8, 2) says that Herod Agrippa lingered for five days and says that the rotting of his flesh produced worms, an item in harmony with the narrative in Luke. Josephus gives further details, one a superstitious sight of an owl sitting on one of the ropes of the awning of the theatre while the people flattered him, an omen of his death to him. Luke puts it simply that God smote him. Gave up the ghost (exepsuxen). Effective aorist active of ekpsuchô, to breathe out, late verb, medical term in Hippocrates, in the N.T. only in Acts 5:5, 10; Acts 12:23. Herod was carried out of the theatre a dying man and lingered only five days.

Verse 24

Grew and multiplied (êuxanen kai eplêthuneto). Imperfect active and passive. Cf. Acts 6:1. The reaction from the death of James and the imprisonment of Peter.

Verse 25

From Jerusalem (ex Ierousalêm). Probably correct text, though D has apo. Westcott and Hort follow Aleph B in reading eis (to) Jerusalem, an impossible reading contradicted by Acts 11:29; Acts 13:1. The ministration (diakonian) referred to is that in Acts 11:29 which may have taken place, in point of time, after the death of Herod. Taking with them (sunparalabontes). Taking along (para) with (sun) them, John Mark from Jerusalem (Acts 12:12) to Antioch (Acts 13:1). The aorist participle does not express subsequent action as Rackham here argues (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 861-863).

In the church that was there (kata tēn ousan ekklēsian). Possibly distributed throughout the church (note "in the church" Acts 11:26). Now a strong organization there. Luke here begins the second part of Acts with Antioch as the centre of operations, no longer Jerusalem. Paul is now the central figure instead of Peter. Jerusalem had hesitated too long to carry out the command of Jesus to take the gospel to the whole world. That glory will now belong to Antioch. Prophets and teachers (prophêtai kai didaskaloi). All prophets were teachers, but not all teachers were prophets who were for-speakers of God, sometimes fore-speakers like Agabus in Acts 11:28. The double use of te here makes three prophets (Barnabas, Symeon, Lucius) and two teachers (Manaen and Saul). Barnabas heads the list (Acts 11:22) and Saul comes last. Symeon Niger may be the Simon of Cyrene who carried the Saviour's cross. Lucius of Cyrene was probably one of the original evangelists (Acts 11:20). The name is one of the forms of Luke, but it is certainly not Luke the Physician. Manaen shows how the gospel was reaching some of the higher classes (home of Herod Antipas). Foster-brother (suntrophos). Old word for nourished with or brought up with one collectaneus (Vulgate). These are clearly the outstanding men in the great Greek church in Antioch.

As they ministered to the Lord (leitourgountôn autôn toi kuriôi). Genitive absolute of leitourgeô, old verb, used of the Attic orators who served the state at their own cost leôs or laos, people, and ergon, work or service). Common in the LXX of the priests who served in the tabernacle (Ex 28:31, 39) like leitourgia (Luke 1:23) which see. So in Heb 10:11. In Rom 15:27 of aiding others in poverty. Here of worship (prayer, exhortation, fasting). The word liturgy grows out of this use. And fasted (kai nêsteuontôn). Genitive absolute also. Christian Jews were keeping up the Jewish fast (Luke 18:12). Note fasting also in the choice of elders for the Mission Churches (Acts 14:23). Fasting was not obligatory on the Christians, but they were facing a great emergency in giving the gospel to the Gentile world. Separate me (aphorizate dê moi). First aorist active imperative of aphorizô, old verb to mark off boundaries or horizon, used by Paul of his call (Rom 1:1; Gal 1:15). The Greek has dê, a shortened form of êdê and like Latin jam and German doch, now therefore. It ought to be preserved in the translation. Cf. Luke 2:15; Acts 15:36; 1Co 6:20. Moi is the ethical dative. As in verse Acts 13:1 Barnabas is named before Saul. Both had been called to ministry long ago, but now this call is to the special campaign among the Gentiles. Both had been active and useful in such work. Whereunto (ho). Here eis has to be repeated from eis to ergon just before, "for which" as Jesus sent the twelve and the seventy in pairs, so here. Paul nearly always had one or more companions.

Verse 3

When they had fasted (nêsteusantes). Either finishing the same fast in verse Acts 13:2 or another one (Hackett), but clearly a voluntary fast. Laid their hands upon them (epithentes tas cheiras autois). Second aorist active participle of epitithêmi. Not ordination to the ministry, but a solemn consecration to the great missionary task to which the Holy Spirit had called them. Whether the whole church took part in this ceremony is not clear, though in Acts 15:40 "the brethren" did commend Paul and Silas. Perhaps some of them here acted for the whole church, all of whom approved the enterprise. But Paul makes it plain in Php 4:15 that the church in Antioch did not make financial contribution to the campaign, but only goodwill. But that was more than the church at Jerusalem would have done as a whole since Peter had been arraigned there for his activities in Caesarea (Acts 11:1-18). Clearly Barnabas and Saul had to finance the tour themselves. It was Philippi that first gave money to Paul's campaigns. There were still heathen enough in Antioch, but the church approved the going of Barnabas and Saul, their very best.

Verse 4

So they (autoi men oun). They themselves indeed therefore. No contrast is necessary, though there is a slight one in verses Acts 13:5, 6. Luke again refers to the Holy Spirit as the source of their authority for this campaign rather than the church at Antioch. Sent forth (ekpempthentes). Old verb from ekpempô and first aorist passive participle, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 17:10. Sailed (apepleusan). Effective aorist active indicative of apopleô, old verb to sail away, depart from. In the N.T. only here and Acts 14:26; Acts 20:15; Acts 27:1. Barnabas was from Cyprus where there were many Jews.

Verse 5

Proclaimed (katêggellon). Imperfect active of kataggellô, inchoative, began to proclaim. This was Paul's rule of procedure, "to the Jew first" (Rom 1:16; Acts 13:46; Acts 17:2; Acts 18:4, 19; Acts 19:8). They had also (eichon de kai). Imperfect active, descriptive. As their attendant (hupêretên). Literally, "under-rower" (hupo, êretês) in the trireme. Probably here minister (chazzan) or assistant in the synagogue as in Luke 4:20. Cf. Mat 5:25. It is not clear what John Mark did, though he was evidently selected by Barnabas as his cousin. He may have helped in the baptizing. There were probably others also in the company (verse Acts 13:13). The "also" may mean that Mark did some preaching. Barnabas was probably the leader in the work in these Jewish synagogues.

Verse 6

Unto Paphos (achri Paphou). The new Paphos at the other end of the island, reached by a fine Roman road, some eight miles north of the old Paphos famous for the worship of Venus. A certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew (andra tina magon pseudoprophêtên Ioudaion). Literally, "a certain man" (andra tina) with various descriptive epithets. The word magon does not necessarily mean "sorcerer," but only a magus (Mat 2:1, 7, 10 which see). The bad sense occurs in Acts 8:9, 11 (Simon Magus) and is made plain here by "false prophet." In verse Acts 13:8 here Barjesus (Son of Jesus) is called "Elymas the sorcerer (or Magian)," probably his professional title, as Luke interprets the Arabic or Aramaic word Elymas. These Jewish mountebanks were numerous and had great influence with the uneducated. In Acts 19:13 the seven sons of Sceva, Jewish exorcists, tried to imitate Paul. If one is surprised that a man like Sergius Paulus should fall under the influence of this fraud, he should recall what Juvenal says of the Emperor Tiberius "sitting on the rock of Capri with his flock of Chaldaeans around him."

Verse 7

With the proconsul Sergius Paulus (sun tôi anthupatôi Sergiôi Paulôi). Luke used to be sharply criticized for applying this term to Sergius Paulus on the ground that Cyprus was a province under the appointment of the emperor with the title of propraetor and not under the control of the senate with the title of proconsul. That was true B.C. 30, but five years later it was changed to proconsul by Augustus and put under the control of the Senate. Two inscriptions have been found with the date A.D. 51 and 52 with the names of proconsuls of Cyprus and one is in the Cesnola Collection, an inscription found at Soli with the name of Paulus as Proconsul, undoubtedly this very man, though no date occurs. A man of understanding (andri sunetôi). All the more amazing that he should be a victim of Barjesus. He had given up idolatry at any rate and was eager to hear Barnabas and Saul.

Verse 8

Withstood them (anthistato autois). Imperfect middle of anthistêmi, to stand against (face to face). Dative case (autois). He persisted in his opposition and was unwilling to lose his great prize. There may have been a public discussion between Elymas and Saul. To turn aside (diastrepsai). First aorist active infinitive of diastrephô, old verb to turn or twist in two, to distort, to pervert (cf. Mat 17:17; Luke 23:2).

Verse 9

But Saul, who is also called Paul (Saulos de, ho kai Paulos). By this remarkably brief phrase Luke presents this epoch in the life of Saul Paul. The "also" (kai) does not mean that the name Paul was given now for the first time, rather than he had always had it. As a Jew and a Roman citizen, he undoubtedly had both names all the time (cf. John Mark, Symeon Niger, Barsabbas Justus). Jerome held that the name of Sergius Paulus was adopted by Saul because of his conversion at this time, but this is a wholly unlikely explanation, "an element of vulgarity impossible to St. Paul" (Farrar). Augustine thought that the meaning of the Latin paulus (little) would incline Saul to adopt, "but as a proper name the word rather suggested the glories of the Aemilian family, and even to us recalls the name of another Paulus, who was 'lavish of his noble life'" (Page). Among the Jews the name Saul was naturally used up to this point, but from now on Luke employs Paul save when there is a reference to his previous life (Acts 22:7; Acts 26:14). His real career is work among the Gentiles and Paul is the name used by them. There is a striking similarity in sound between the Hebrew Saul and the Roman Paul. Paul was proud of his tribe of Benjamin and so of King Saul (Php 3:5). Filled with the Holy Spirit (plêstheis pneumatos hagiou). First aorist (ingressive) passive participle of pimplêmi with the genitive case. A special influx of power to meet this emergency. Here was a cultured heathen, typical of the best in Roman life, who called forth all the powers of Paul plus the special help of the Holy Spirit to expose the wickedness of Elymas Barjesus. If one wonders why the Holy Spirit filled Paul for this emergency rather than Barnabas, when Barnabas was named first in Acts 13:2, he can recall the sovereignty of the Holy Spirit in his choice of agents (1Co 12:4-11) and also the special call of Paul by Christ (Acts 9:15; Acts 26:17). Fastened his eyes (atenisas). As already in Luke 4:20; Luke 22:56; Acts 3:4, 12; Acts 6:15; Acts 10:4.

Verse 10

Of all guile (pantos dolou). From delô, to catch with bait, old word, already seen in Mat 26:4; Mark 7:22; Mark 14:1. Paul denounces Elymas as a trickster. All villainy (pâsês rhâidiourgias). Late compound from rhâidiourgos (rhâidios, easy, facile, ergon, deed, one who does a thing adroitly and with ease). So levity in Xenophon and unscrupulousness in Polybius, Plutarch, and the papyri. Only here in the N.T., though the kindred word rhâidiourgêma occurs in Acts 18:14. With deadly accuracy Paul pictured this slick rascal. Thou son of the devil (huie diabolou). Damning phrase like that used by Jesus of the Pharisees in John 8:44, a slanderer like the diabolos. This use of son (huios) for characteristic occurs in Acts 3:25; Acts 4:36, a common Hebrew idiom, and may be used purposely by Paul in contrast with the name Barjesus (son of Jesus) that Elymas bore (Acts 13:6). Enemy of all righteousness (echthre pâsês dikaiosunês). Personal enemy to all justice, sums up all the rest. Note triple use of "all" (pantos, pâsês, pâsês), total depravity in every sense. Wilt thou not cease? (ou pausêi). An impatient rhetorical question, almost volitive in force (Robertson, Grammar, p. 874). Note ou, not mê, To pervert (diastrephôn). Present active participle describing the actual work of Elymas as a perverter or distorter (see verse Acts 13:8). More exactly, Wilt thou not cease perverting? The right ways of the Lord (tas hodous tou kuriou tas eutheias). The ways of the Lord the straight ones as opposed to the crooked ways of men (Isa 40:4; Isa 42:16; Luke 3:5). The task of John the Baptist as of all prophets and preachers is to make crooked paths straight and to get men to walk in them. This false prophet was making even the Lord's straight ways crooked. Elymas has many successors.

Verse 11

Upon thee (epi se). The use of epi with the accusative is rich and varied, the precise shade of meaning depending on the content. The "hand of the Lord" might be kindly (Acts 11:21) or hostile (Heb 10:31), but when God's hand touches one's life (Job 19:21) it may be in judgment as here with Elymas. He has not humbled himself under the mighty hand of God (1Pe 5:6). Not seeing (mê blepôn). Repeating with negative participle the negative idea in "blind" (tuphlos). "It was a judicial infliction; blindness for blindness, darkness without for wilful darkness within" (Furneaux). He was an example of the blind leading the blind that was to cease and Sergius Paulus was to be led into the light. The blindness was to be "for a season" (achri kairou, Luke 4:13), if it should please God to restore his sight. Paul apparently recalls his own blindness as he entered Damascus. A mist (achlus). Especially a dimness of the eyes, old poetic word and late prose, in LXX, only here in N.T. Galen uses it of the opacity of the eye caused by a wound. He went about seeking some one to lead him by the hand (periagôn ezêtei cheiragôgous). A rather free rendering. Literally, "going about (periagôn, present active participle of periagô) he was seeking (ezêtei, imperfect active of zêteô) guides (cheiragôgous, from cheir, hand, and agôgos, guide, from agô, one who leads by the hand)." The very verb cheiragôgeô, to lead by the hand, Luke uses of Paul in Acts 9:8, as he entered Damascus.

Verse 12

Believed (episteusen). Ingressive aorist active indicative. Renan considers it impossible that a Roman proconsul could be converted by a miracle. But it was the teaching about the Lord (tou kuriou, objective genitive) by which he was astonished (ekplêssomenos, present passive participle of ekplêssô, see on Mat 7:28) or struck out as well as by the miracle. The blindness came "immediately" (paraehrêma) upon the judgment pronounced by Paul. It is possible that Sergius Paulus was converted to Christ without openly identifying himself with the Christians as his baptism is not mentioned as in the case of Cornelius. But, even if he was baptized, he need not have been deposed from his proconsulship as Furneaux and Rackham argue because his office called for "official patronage of idolatrous worship." But that could have been merely perfunctory as it probably was already. He had been a disciple of the Jewish magician, Elymas Barjesus, without losing his position. Imperial persecution against Christianity had not yet begun. Furneaux even suggests that the conversion of a proconsul to Christianity at this stage would have called for mention by the Roman and Greek historians. There is the name Sergia Paullina in a Christian cemetery in Rome which shows that one of his family was a Christian later. One will believe what he wills about Sergius Paulus, but I do not see that Luke leaves him in the category of Simon Magus who "believed" (Acts 8:13) for revenue only.

Verse 13

Paul and his company (hoi peri Paulon). Neat Greek idiom as in Plato, Cratylus 440 C hoi peri Herakleiton. On this idiom see Gildersleeve, Syntax, p. 264. It means a man and his followers, "those around Paul." Now Paul ranks first always in Acts save in Acts 14:2; Acts 15:12, 25 for special reasons. Heretofore Saul (Paul) held a secondary position (Acts 9:27; Acts 11:30; Acts 13:1). "In nothing is the greatness of Barnabas more manifest than in his recognition of the superiority of Paul and acceptance of a secondary position for himself" (Furneaux). Set sail (anachthentes). First aorist passive participle of anagô. Thirteen times in the Acts and Luke 8:22 which see. They sailed up to sea and came down (katagô, katabainô) to land. So it looks. Departed from them (apochôrêsas ap' autôn). First aorist active participle of apochôreô, old verb to withdraw, go away from. In the N.T. only here and Mat 7:23; Luke 9:39. He is called John there as in verse Acts 13:5 and Mark in Acts 15:39, though John Mark in Acts 12:12, 25. This may be accidental or on purpose (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 317). Luke is silent on John's reasons for leaving Paul and Barnabas. He was the cousin of Barnabas and may not have relished the change in leadership. There may have been change in plans also now that Paul is in command. Barnabas had chosen Cyprus and Paul has led them to Perga in Pamphylia and means to go on into the highlands to Antioch in Pisidia. There were perils of many sorts around them and ahead (2Co 11:26), perils to which John Mark was unwilling to be exposed. Paul will specifically charge him at Antioch with desertion of his post (Acts 15:39). It is possible, as Ramsay suggests, that the mosquitoes at Perga gave John malaria. If so, they bit Paul and Barnabas also. He may not have liked Paul's aggressive attitude towards the heathen. At any rate he went home to Jerusalem instead of to Antioch, zu seiner Mutter (Holtzmann). It was a serious breach in the work, but Paul and Barnabas stuck to the work.

Verse 14

Passing through (dielthontes). It is not clear why Paul and Barnabas left Perga so soon nor why they went to Antioch in Pisidia. Ramsay suggests malaria that spurred them on to the hills after the desertion of John Mark. They preached at Perga on the return (Acts 14:25) and apparently hurried away now. Farrar thinks that the hot weather had driven the population to the hills. At any rate it is not difficult to imagine the perils of this climb over the rough mountain way from Perga to Pisidian Antioch to which Paul apparently refers in 2Co 11:26. Sat down (ekathisan). Ingressive aorist active indicative, took their seats as visiting Jews, possibly in the seats of the rabbis (J. Lightfoot). Whether they expected to be called on or not, they were given the opportunity as prominent visitors. The Pisidian Antioch was really in Phrygia, but towards Pisidia to distinguish it from Antioch on the Maeander (Ramsay, Church in the Roman Empire, p. 25). It was a colony like Philippi and so a free city. If Paul is referring to South Galatia and not North Galatia in Gal 4:13 when he says that his preaching in Galatia at first was due to illness, then it was probably here at Pisidian Antioch. What it was we have no means of knowing, though it was a temptation in his flesh to them so severe that they were willing to pluck out their eyes for him (Gal 4:14). Ophthalmia, malaria, epilepsy have all been suggested as this stake in the flesh (2Co 12:7). But Paul was able to preach with power whatever his actual physical condition was.

Verse 15

After the reading of the law and the prophets (meta tēn anagnōsin tou nomou kai tōn prophētōn). The law was first read in the synagogues till B.C. 163 when Antiochus Epiphanes prohibited it. Then the reading of the prophets was substituted for it. The Maccabees restored both. There was a reading from the law and one from the prophets in Hebrew which was interpreted into the Aramaic or the Greek Koinē, for the people. The reading was followed by the sermon as when Jesus was invited to read and to preach in Nazareth (Luke 4:16). For the service in the synagogue see Schuerer, History of the Jewish People, Div. II, Vol. II, pp. 79ff. It was the duty of the rulers of the synagogue (archisynagōgoi) to select the readers and the speakers for the service (Mark 5:22, 35-38; Luke 8:49; Luke 13:14; Acts 13:15; Acts 18:8, 17). Any rabbi or distinguished stranger could be called on to speak. If ye have any word of exhortation for the people (ei tis estin en hūmin logos paraklēseōs pros ton laon). Literally, if there is among you any word of exhortation for the people. It is a condition of the first class and assumed to be true, a polite invitation. On "exhortation" (paraklēsis) see Acts 9:31. It may be a technical phrase used in the synagogue (Heb 13:22; 1Ti 4:13).

Verse 16

Paul stood up (anastas Paulos). The Jewish custom was to sit while speaking (Luke 4:20), but the Greek and Roman was to stand (Acts 17:22). It is possible as Lewin (Life of St. Paul, Vol. 1, p. 141) suggests that here Paul stepped upon the platform and then took his seat as he began to speak or he may have followed the Greek and Roman custom. Paul is the leader now and the more gifted speaker (Acts 14:12), so that he responds to the courteous invitation of the rulers. Beckoning (kataseisas). First aorist active participle of kataseiō, old verb to shake down, a dramatic gesture for quiet and order like Peter in Acts 12:17 and Paul on the steps of the tower of Antonia (Acts 21:40). And ye that fear God (kai hoi phoboumenoi ton theon). Evidently large numbers of these Gentiles like Cornelius in Caesarea were present. They offered Paul a great opportunity for reaching the purely pagan Gentiles. This (verses Acts 13:16-41) is the first full report of a sermon of Paul's that Luke has preserved for us. He is now a practised preacher of the gospel that he began proclaiming at Damascus, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah of promise and the Saviour of the whole world both Jew and Gentile if they will only believe on him and be saved. It is possible that Paul here based his sermon on the passages of the law and the prophets that had just been read. He uses two words from the LXX, one in verse Acts 13:19 from Deut 1:31 etrophophorêsen (as a nursing-father bare he them), the reading of many old MSS. and the one preferred by the American Committee, the other in verse Acts 13:17 from Isa 1:2 hupsôsen (exalted). At any rate it is clear that Paul spoke in Greek so that all could understand his sermon. He may have written out notes of this sermon afterwards for Luke. The keynotes of Paul's theology as found in his Epistles appear in this sermon. It is interesting to observe the steady growth of Paul's Christology as he faced the great problems of his day. Here we see Paul's gospel for the Jews and the God-fearers (Gentiles friendly to the Jews).

Verse 17

Chose (exelexato). First aorist middle (indirect), selected for himself. Israel was the chosen people. Exalted (hupsôsen). From hupsôô, late verb from hupsos so often used of Christ. When they sojourned (en têi paroikiâi). In the sojourn. Late word from paroikos (sojourner, dweller, Acts 7:6) common in LXX. In N.T. only here and 1Pe 1:17. With a high arm (meta brachionos hupsêlou). Vivid picture from the LXX (Ex 6:1, 6; Deut 5:15; Ps 136:12).

Verse 18

Suffered he their manners (etrophophorêsen). First aorist active indicative of trophophoreô, late word from tropos, manner, and pherô, reading of Aleph B D and accepted by Westcott and Hort. But A C Sahidic Bohairic read etrophophorêsen from trophophoreô (trophos, a nurse, and pherô,) late word (II Macc. 7:27), probably correct word here and Deut 1:31.

Verse 19

When he had destroyed (kathelôn). Second aorist active participle of kathaireô, to tear down, old verb. He gave them for an inheritance (kateklêronomêsen). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb kata-klêro-nomeô, late verb in LXX (Num 34:18; Deut 3:28; Jos 14:1) and only here in the N.T., to distribute by lot, to distribute as an inheritance. This is the correct reading and not kateklêrodotêsen from kataklêrodoteô of the Textus Receptus. These two verbs were confused in the MSS. of the LXX as well as here. For about four hundred and fifty years (hôs etesin tetrakosiois kai pentêkonta). Associative instrumental case with an expression of time as in Acts 8:11; Luke 8:29 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 527). The oldest MSS. (Aleph A B C Vg Sah Boh) place these figures before "after these things" and so in verse Acts 13:19. This is the true reading and is in agreement with the notation in 1Ki 6:1. The difficulty found in the Textus Receptus (King James Version) thus disappears with the true text. The four hundred and fifty years runs therefore from the birth of Isaac to the actual conquest of Canaan and does not cover the period of the Judges. See on Acts 7:6.

Verse 20

And after these things (kai meta tauta). That is, the time of the Judges then began. Cf. Jdg 2:16. Until Samuel the prophet (heôs Samouêl prophêtou). The terminus ad quem. He was the last of the judges and the first of the prophets who selected the first king (Saul) under God's guidance. Note the absence of the Greek article with prophêtou.

Verse 21

They asked (êitêsanto). First aorist indirect middle indicative, they asked for themselves. They were tired of a theocracy. Cf. 1Sa 8:5; 1Sa 10:1. Paul mentions with pride that Benjamin was the tribe of Saul (his name also), but he does not allude to Saul's sin (Furneaux). For the space of forty years (etê tesserakonta). Accusative of extent of time. Not in the O.T., but in Josephus, Ant. VI. 14, 9.

Verse 22

When he had removed him (metastêsas auton). First aorist active participle of methistêmi, old verb to transfer, to transpose (note force of meta). This verb occurs in Luke 16:4 by the unjust steward about his removal from office. Cf. 1Sa 15:16. To be (eis). As or for, Greek idiom like the Hebrew le, common in the LXX. A man after my heart (andra kata tên kardian mou). The words quoted by Paul as a direct saying of God are a combination of Ps 89:20, 21; 1Sa 13:14 (the word of the Lord to Samuel about David). Knowling thinks that this free and rather loose quotation of the substance argues for the genuineness of the report of Paul's sermon. Hackett observes that the commendation of David is not absolute, but, as compared with the disobedient Saul, he was a man who did God's will in spite of the gross sin of which he repented (Ps 51:1). Note "wills" (thelêmata), plural, of God.

Verse 23

Of this man's seed (toutou apo tou spermatos). Emphatic position of toutou. Of this one from the (his) seed. According to promise (kat' epaggelian). This phrase in Gal 3:29; 2Ti 1:1. See the promise in 2Sa 7:2; Ps 132:11; Isa 11:1, 10; Jer 23:5; Zec 3:8. In Zec 3:8 the verb agô is used of the sending of the Messiah as here. A Saviour Jesus (Sôtêra Iêsoun). Jesus is in apposition with Saviour (accusative case) and comes at the end of the sentence in contrast with "this man" (David) at the beginning. Paul goes no further than David because he suggests to him Jesus, descendant in the flesh from David. By "Israel" here Paul means the Jewish people, though he will later enlarge this promise to include the spiritual Israel both Gentile and Jew (Rom 9:6).

Verse 24

When John had first preached (prokêruxantos Iôanou). Literally, John heralding beforehand, as a herald before the king (Luke 3:3). Genitive absolute of first aorist active participle of prokêrussô, old verb to herald beforehand, here alone in the N.T., though Textus Receptus has it also in Acts 3:20. Before his coming (pro prosôpou tês eisodou autou). Literally, before the face of his entering in (here act of entrance as 1Th 1:9, not the gate as in Heb 10:19). See Mal

3:1 quoted in Mat 11:10 (Luke 7:27) for this Hebrew phrase and also Luke 1:76. The baptism of repentance (baptisma metanoias). Baptism marked by, characterized by (genitive case, case of kind or species) repentance (change of mind and life). The very phrase used of John's preaching in Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3. It is clear therefore that Paul understood John's ministry and message as did Peter (Acts 2:38; Acts 10:37).

Verse 25

As John was fulfilling his course (hôs eplêrou Iôanês ton dromon). Imperfect active of plêroô, describing his vivid ministry without defining the precise period when John asked the question. Paul uses this word dromos (course) of his own race (Acts 20:24; 2Ti 4:7). What suppose ye that I am? (Ti eme huponoeite einai?) Note ti (neuter), not tina (masculine), what not who, character, not identity. It is indirect discourse (the infinitive einai and the accusative of general reference). Huponoe" (hupo, noeô) is to think secretly, to suspect, to conjecture. I am not he (ouk eimi egô). These precise words are not given in the Gospels, but the idea is the same as the disclaimers by the Baptist in John 1:19-27 (cf. also Mat 3:11; Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16). Paul had a true grasp of the message of the Baptist. He uses the very form lûsai (first aorist active infinitive of luô) found in Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16 and the word for shoes (hupodêma, singular) in all three. His quotation is remarkably true to the words in the Synoptic Gospels. How did Paul get hold of the words of the Baptist so clearly?

Verse 26

To us (hêmin). Both Jews and Gentiles, both classes in Paul's audience, dative of advantage. Is sent forth (exapestalê). Second aorist passive indicative of the double compound verb exapostellô, common verb to send out (ex) and forth (apo). It is a climacteric or culminative aorist tense. It has come to us in one day, this glorious promise. The word of this salvation (ho logos tês sôtêrias tautês). The message of Jesus as Saviour (verse Acts 13:23), long ago promised and now come to us as Saviour.

Verse 27

Because they knew him not (touton agnoésantes). First aorist active participle (causal) of agnoeô, old verb, not to know. Peter gives "ignorance" (agnoia) as the excuse of the Jews in the death of Christ (Acts 3:17) and Paul does the same about his conduct before his conversion (1Ti 1:13). This ignorance mitigated the degree of their guilt, but it did not remove it, for it was willing ignorance and prejudice. The voices of the prophets which are read (tas phônas tôn prophêtôn tas anaginôskomenas). Object also of agnoésantes, though it could be the object of eplêrôsan (fulfilled) if kai is taken as "also". The "voices" were heard as they were read aloud each Sabbath in the synagogue. In their ignorant condemnation they fulfilled the prophecies about the suffering Messiah.

Verse 28

Though they found no cause of death (mêdemian aitian thanatou heurontes). Second aorist active with usual negative of the participle. As a matter of fact the Sanhedrin did charge Jesus with blasphemy, but could not prove it ( Mat 26:65; Mat 27:24; Luke 23:22). At this time no Gospel had probably been written, but Paul knew that Jesus was innocent. He uses this same idiom about his own innocence (Acts 28:18). That he should be slain (anairethênai auton). First aorist passive infinitive, the accusative case, the direct object of êitêsanto (first aorist middle indicative, asked as a favour to themselves).

Verse 29

From the tree (apo tou xulou). Not here strictly a tree, but wood as already in Acts 5:30; Acts 10:29 and later in Gal 3:13. Strictly speaking, it was Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus who took the body of Jesus down from the cross, though the Jews had asked Pilate to have the bones of Jesus broken that his body should not remain on the cross during the Sabbath (John 19:31). Paul does not distinguish the details here. Laid (ethêkan). First (kappa) aorist active indicative third plural of tithêmi in place of ethesan the usual second aorist active plural form. Tomb (mnêmeion). Memorial, common in the Gospels.

Verse 30

But God raised him from the dead (ho de theos êgeiren ek nekrôn). This crucial fact Paul puts sharply as he always did.

Verse 31

Was seen for many days (ôphthê epi hêmeras pleious). The common verb (first aorist passive indicative of horaô, to see) for the appearance of the Risen Christ, the one used by Paul of his own vision of Christ (1Co 15:8), which is not reported by Luke here. For more days (than a few), the language means, forty in all (Acts 1:3). Of them that came up with him (tois sunanabâsin autôi). Dative (after ôphthê) articular participle (second aorist active of sunanabainô) with associative instrumental case (autôi), the very men who knew him best and who could not be easily deceived about the reality of his resurrection. But this fact rules Paul out on this point, for he had not fellowshiped with Jesus from Galilee to Jerusalem. Who are now his witnesses (hoitines nun eisin martures autou). The very point that Peter used to clinch his argument with such powerful effect (Acts 2:32; Acts 3:15).

Verse 32

We bring you good tidings of the promise (hêmeis humâs euaggelizometha tèn epaggelian). Two accusatives here (person and thing), old Greek did not use accusative of the person with this verb as in Acts 16:10; Luke 3:18. Note "we you" together. Here the heart of Paul's message on this occasion.

Verse 33

Hath fulfilled (ekpeplêrôken). Hath filled out (ek). Unto our children (tois teknois hêmôn). The MSS. vary greatly here about hêmôn (our), some have autôn, some autôn hêmin. Westcott and Hort consider these readings "a primitive error" for hêmin (to us) taken with anastêsas Iêsoun (having for us raised up Jesus). This raising up (from anistêmi, set up) as in Acts 3:22; Acts 7:37 refers not to resurrection (verse Acts 13:34), but to the sending of Jesus (two raisings up). In the second psalm (en tôi psalmôi tôi deuterôi).

Ps 2:7. D has prôtôi because the first psalm was often counted as merely introductory.

Verse 34

Now no more to return to corruption (mêketi mellonta hupostrephein eis diaphthoran). No longer about to return as Lazarus did. Jesus did not die again and so is the first fruits of the resurrection (1Co 15:23; Rom 6:9). He hath spoken (eirêken). Present perfect active indicative, common way of referring to the permanent utterances of God which are on record in the Scriptures. The holy and sure blessings of David (ta hosia Daueid ta pista). See 2Sa 7:13. Literally, "the holy things of David the trustworthy things." He explains "the holy things" at once.

Verse 35

Because (dioti). Compound conjunction (dia, hoti) like our "because that." The reason for the previous statement about "the holy things." Thou wilt not give thy holy one to see corruption (ou dôseis ton hosion sou idein diaphthoran). Quotation from Ps 16:10 to show that Jesus did not see corruption in his body, a flat contradiction for those who deny the bodily resurrection of Jesus.

Verse 36

His own generation (idiâi geneâi). Either locative case, "in his own generation" or dative object of hupêretêsas (served). The counsel of God (têi tou theou boulêi). So here, either the dative, the object of hupêretêsas if geneâi is locative, or the instrumental case "by the counsel of God" which again may be construed either with hupêretêsas (having served) or after ekoimêthê (fell on sleep). Either of the three ways is grammatical and makes good sense. Koimaomai for death we have already had (Acts 7:60). So Jesus (John 11:11) and Paul (1Co 15:6, 51). Was laid (prosetethê). Was added unto (first aorist passive indicative of prostithêmi). See the verb in Acts 2:47; Acts 5:14. This figure for death probably arose from the custom of burying families together (Gen 15:15; Jdg 2:10). Saw corruption (eiden diaphthoran). As Jesus did not (Acts 2:31) as he shows in verse Acts 13:37.

Verse 38

Through this man (dia toutou). This very man whom the Jews had crucified and whom God had raised from the dead. Remission of sins (aphesis hamartiôn) is proclaimed (kataggelletai) to you. This is the keynote of Paul's message as it had been that of Peter at Pentecost (Acts 2:38; Acts 5:31; Acts 10:43). Cf. Acts 26:18. This glorious message Paul now presses home in his exhortation.

Verse 39

And by him every one that believeth is justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses (kai apo pantôn hôn ouk êdunêthête en nomôi Môuseôs dikaiothênai en toutôi pàs ho pisteuôn dikaioutai). This is a characteristic Greek sentence with the principal clause at the end and Pauline to the core. A literal rendering as to the order would be: "And from all the things from (apo not repeated in the Greek, but understood, the ablative case being repeated) which ye were not able to be justified in this one every one who believes is justified." The climax is at the close and gives us the heart of Paul's teaching about Christ. "We have here the germ of all that is most characteristic in Paul's later teaching. It is the argument of the Epistle to Galatians and Romans in a sentence" (Furneaux). The failure of the Mosaic law to bring the kind of righteousness that God demands is stated. This is made possible in and by (en) Christ alone. Paul's favourite words occur here, pisteuô, believe, with which pistis, faith, is allied, dikaioô, to set right with God on the basis of faith. In Rom 6:7 Paul uses apo also after dikaioô. These are key words (pisteuô and dikaioô) in Paul's theology and call for prolonged and careful study if one is to grasp the Pauline teaching. Dikaioô primarily means to make righteous, to declare righteous like axioô, to deem worthy (axios). But in the end Paul holds that real righteousness will come (Rom 6:1-8:39) to those whom God treats as righteous (Rom 3:1-5:21) though both Gentile and Jew fall short without Christ (Rom 1:1-3:31). This is the doctrine of grace that will prove a stumbling block to the Jews with their ceremonial works and foolishness to the Greeks with their abstract philosophical ethics (1Co 1:23-25). It is a new and strange doctrine to the people of Antioch.

Verse 40

Beware therefore (blepete oun). The warning is pertinent. Perhaps Paul noticed anger on the faces of some of the rabbis. Lest there come upon you (mê epelthêi). Second aorist active subjunctive with the negative final conjunction mê. In the prophets (en tois prophêtais). The quotation is from the LXX text of Hab 1:5. The plural here refers to the prophetic collection (Luke 24:44; Acts 24:14). "The Jews of Habakkuk's day had refused to believe in the impending invasion by the Chaldeans, and yet it had come" (Furneaux).

Verse 41

Ye despisers (hoi kataphronêtai). Not in the Hebrew, but in the LXX. It is pertinent for Paul's purpose. Perish (aphanisthête). Or vanish away. First aorist passive imperative. Added by the LXX to the Hebrew. If one declare it unto you (ean tis ekdiêgêtai humin). Condition of third class with present middle subjunctive, if one keep on outlining (double compound, ek-di-êgeomai) it unto you. Paul has hurled a thunderbolt at the close.

Verse 42

And as they went out (Exiontôn de autôn). Genitive absolute with present active participle of exeimi, to go out, old verb, in the N.T. only in Ac 12:42; Acts 17:15; Acts 20:7; Acts 27:43. As they (Paul and Barnabas) were going out with all the excitement and hubbub created by the sermon. They besought (parekaloun). Imperfect active, inchoative, began to beseech. The Textus Receptus inserts wrongly ta ethnê (the Gentiles) as if the Jews were opposed to Paul from the first as some doubtless were. But both Jews and Gentiles asked for the repetition of the sermon (lalêthênai, first aorist passive infinitive object of parekaloun with accusative of general reference). The next Sabbath (eis to metaxu sabbaton). Late use (Josephus, Plutarch, etc.) of metaxu (meta and xun=sun) in sense of after or next instead of between (sense of meta prevailing). Note use of eis for "on" or "by."

Verse 43

When the synagogue broke up (lutheisês tês sunagôgês). Genitive absolute of first aorist passive participle of luô. Apparently Paul and Barnabas had gone out before the synagogue was formally dismissed. Of the devout proselytes (tôn sebomenôn prosêlutôn). Of the worshipping proselytes described in verses Acts 13:16, 25 as "those who fear God" (cf. Acts 16:14) employed usually of the uncircumcised Gentiles who yet attended the synagogue worship, but the word prosêlutoi (pros, êlutos verbal from erchomai, a new-comer) means usually those who had become circumcised (proselytes of righteousness). Yet the rabbis used it also of proselytes of the gate who had not yet become circumcised, probably the idea here. In the N.T. the word occurs only in Mat 23:15; Acts 2:10; Acts 6:5; Acts 13:43. Many (both Jews and proselytes) followed (êkolouthêsan, ingressive aorist active indicative of akolouthêô) Paul and Barnabas to hear more without waiting till the next Sabbath. So we are to picture Paul and Barnabas speaking (proslalountes, late compound, in N.T. only here and Acts 28:20) to eager groups. Urged (epeithon). Imperfect active of peithô, either descriptive (were persuading) or conative (were trying to persuade). Paul had great powers of persuasion (Acts 18:4; Acts 19:8, 26; Acts 26:28; Acts 28:23; 2Co 5:11; Gal 1:10). These Jews "were beginning to understand for the first time the true meaning of their national history" (Furieux), "the grace of God" to them.

Verse 44

The next Sabbath (tôi erchomenôi sabbatôi). Locative case, on the coming (erchomenôi, present middle participle of erchomai) Sabbath. So the best MSS., though some have echomenôi (present middle participle of echô in sense of near, bordering, following as in Luke 13:33; Ac 29:15). Almost (schedon). Old word, but in N.T. only here, Acts 19:26; Heb 9:22. Was gathered together (sunêchthê). First aorist (effective) passive indicative of sunagô, old and common verb. The "whole city" could hardly all gather in the synagogue. Perhaps Paul spoke in the synagogue and Barnabas to the overflow outside (see verse Acts 13:46). It was an eager and earnest gathering "to hear (akousai, first aorist active infinitive of purpose) the word of God" and a great opportunity for Paul and Barnabas. The Codex Bezae has it "to hear Paul." It was the new preacher (Paul) that drew the big crowd. It was a crowd such as will later hang on the words of John Wesley and George Whitfield when they preach Jesus Christ.

Verse 45

The Jews (hoi Ioudaioi). Certainly not the proselytes of verse Acts 13:43. Probably many of the Jews that were then favourably disposed to Paul's message had reacted against him under the influence of the rabbis during the week and evidently on this Sabbath very many Gentiles ("almost the whole city," "the multitudes" tous ochlous) had gathered, to the disgust of the stricter Jews. Nothing is specifically stated here about the rabbis, but they were beyond doubt the instigators of, and the ringleaders in, the opposition as in Thessalonica (Acts 17:5). No such crowds (ochlous) came to the synagogue when they were the speakers. With jealousy (zêlou). Genitive case of zêlos (from zeô, to boil) after eplêsthêsan (effective first aorist passive indicative of pimplêmi). Envy and jealousy arise between people of the same calling (doctors towards doctors, lawyers towards lawyers, preachers towards preachers). So these rabbis boiled with jealousy when they saw the crowds gathered to hear Paul and Barnabas. Contradicted (antelegon). Imperfect active of antilegô, old verb to speak against, to say a word in opposition to (anti, face to face). It was interruption of the service and open opposition in the public meeting. Paul and Barnabas were guests by courtesy and, of course, could not proceed further, when denied that privilege. Blasphemed (blasphêmountes). Blaspheming. So the correct text without the addition antilegontes (repeated from antelegon above). Common verb in the Gospels for saying injurious and harmful things. Doubtless these rabbis indulged in unkind personalities and made it plain that Paul and Barnabas were going beyond the limitations of pure Judaism in their contacts with Gentiles.

Verse 46

Spake out boldly (parrêsiasamenoi). First aorist middle participle of parrêsiazomai, to use freedom in speaking, to assume boldness. Both Paul and Barnabas accepted the challenge of the rabbis. They would leave their synagogue, but not without a word of explanation. It was necessary to you first (Humin ên anagkaion prôton). They had done their duty and had followed the command of Jesus (Acts 1:8). They use the very language of Peter in Acts 3:26 (humin prôton) "to you first." This position Paul as the apostle to the Gentiles will always hold, the Jew first in privilege and penalty (Rom 1:16; Rom 2:9, 10). Ye thrust it from you (apôtheisthe auton). Present middle (indirect, from yourselves) indicative of apôtheô, to push from. Vigorous verb seen already in Acts 7:27, 39 which see. Judge yourselves unworthy (ouk axious krinete heautous). Present active indicative of the common verb krinô, to judge or decide with the reflexive pronoun expressed. Literally, Do not judge yourselves worthy. By their action and their words they had taken a violent and definite stand. Lo, we turn to the Gentiles (idou strephometha eis ta ethnê). It is a crisis (idou, lo): "Lo, we turn ourselves to the Gentiles." Probably also aoristic present, we now turn (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 864-70). Strephometha is probably the direct middle (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 806-08) though the aorist passive estraphên is so used also (Acts 7:39). It is a dramatic moment as Paul and Barnabas turn from the Jews to the Gentiles, a prophecy of the future history of Christianity. In Rom 9:1-11:36 Paul will discuss at length the rejection of Christ by the Jews and the calling of the Gentiles to be the real (the spiritual) Israel.

Verse 47

For so hath the Lord commanded us (houtôs gar entetaltai hêmin ho kurios). Perfect middle indicative of entellô, poetic (Pindar) and late verb to enjoin (Acts 1:2). The command of the Lord Paul finds in Isa 49:6 quoted by Simeon also (Luke 2:32). The conviction of Paul's mind was now made clear by the fact of the rejection by the Jews. He could now see more clearly the words of the prophet about the Gentiles: The Messiah is declared by God in Isaiah to be "a light to the Gentiles" (ethnôn, objective genitive), "a light for revelation to the Gentiles" (phôs eis apokalupsin ethnôn, Luke 2:32). So Paul is carrying out the will of God in turning to the Gentiles. He will still appeal to the Jews elsewhere as they allow him to do so, but not here. That thou shouldest be (tou einai se). Genitive articular infinitive of purpose with the accusative of general reference. This is all according to God's fixed purpose (tetheika, perfect active indicative of tithêmi). Unto the uttermost part of the earth (heôs eschatou tês gês). Unto the last portion (genitive neuter, not feminine) of the earth. It is a long time from Paul to now, not to say from Isaiah to now, and not yet has the gospel been carried to half of the people of earth. God's people are slow in carrying out God's plans for salvation.

Verse 48

As the Gentiles heard this they were glad (akouonta ta ethnê echairon). Present active participle of akouô and imperfect active of chairô, linear action descriptive of the joy of the Gentiles. Glorified the word of God (edoxazon ton logon tou theou). Imperfect active again. The joy of the Gentiles increased the fury of the Jews. "The synagogue became a scene of excitement which must have been something like the original speaking with tongues" (Rackham). The joy of the Gentiles was to see how they could receive the higher blessing of Judaism without circumcision and other repellent features of Jewish ceremonialism. It was the gospel of grace and liberty from legalism that Paul had proclaimed. Whether Gal 4:13 describes this incident or not (the South Galatian theory), it illustrates it when Gentiles received Paul as if he were Christ Jesus himself. It was triumph with the Gentiles, but defeat with the Jews. As many as were ordained to eternal life (hosoi êsan tetagmenoi eis zôên aiônion). Periphrastic past perfect passive indicative of tassô, a military term to place in orderly arrangement. The word "ordain" is not the best translation here. "Appointed," as Hackett shows, is better. The Jews here had voluntarily rejected the word of God. On the other side were those Gentiles who gladly accepted what the Jews had rejected, not all the Gentiles. Why these Gentiles here ranged themselves on God's side as opposed to the Jews Luke does not tell us. This verse does not solve the vexed problem of divine sovereignty and human free agency. There is no evidence that Luke had in mind an absolutum decretum of personal salvation. Paul had shown that God's plan extended to and included Gentiles. Certainly the Spirit of God does move upon the human heart to which some respond, as here, while others push him away. Believed (episteusan). Summary or constative first aorist active indicative of pisteuô. The subject of this verb is the relative clause. By no manner of legerdemain can it be made to mean "those who believe were appointed." It was saving faith that was exercised only by those who were appointed unto eternal life, who were ranged on the side of eternal life, who were thus revealed as the subjects of God's grace by the stand that they took on this day for the Lord. It was a great day for the kingdom of God.

Verse 49

Was spread abroad (diephereto). Imperfect passive of diapherô, to carry in different directions (dia). By the recent converts as well as by Paul and Barnabas. This would seem to indicate a stay of some months with active work among the Gentiles that bore rich fruit. Throughout all the region (di' holês tês chôras). Antioch in Pisidia as a Roman colony would be the natural centre of a Roman Regio, an important element in Roman imperial administration. There were probably other Regiones in South Galatia (Ramsay, St. Paul the Traveller and Roman Citizen, pp. 102-12).

Verse 50

Urged on (parôtrunan). First aorist (effective) active of par-otrunô, old verb, but here alone in the N.T., to incite, to stir up. The Jews were apparently not numerous in this city as they had only one synagogue, but they had influence with people of prominence, like "the devout women of honourable estate" (tas sebomenas gunaikas tas euschêmonas), the female proselytes of high station, a late use of an old word used about Joseph of Arimathea (Mark 15:43). The rabbis went after these Gentile women who had embraced Judaism (cf. Acts 17:4 in Thessalonica) as Paul had made an appeal to them. The prominence of women in public life here at Antioch is quite in accord with what we know of conditions in the cities of Asia Minor. "Thus women were appointed under the empire as magistrates, as presidents of the games, and even the Jews elected a woman as Archisynagogos, at least in one instance at Smyrna" (Knowling). In Damascus Josephus (War II. 20, 21) says that a majority of the married women were proselytes. Strabo (VIII. 2) and Juvenal (VI. 542) speak of the addiction of women to the Jewish religion. The chief men of the city (tous prôtous tês poleôs). Probably city officials (the Duumviri, the Praetors, the First Ten in the Greek Cities of the east) or other "foremost" men, not officials. The rabbis were shrewd enough to reach these men (not proselytes) through the women who were proselytes of distinction. Stirred up a persecution (epêgeiran diôgmon). First aorist active indicative of epegeirô, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 14:2. Paul seems to allude to this persecution in 2Ti 3:11 "persecutions, sufferings, what things befell me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, what persecutions I endured." Here Paul had perils from his own countrymen and perils from the Gentiles after the perils of rivers and perils of robbers on the way from Perga (2Co 11:26). He was thrice beaten with rods (tris erhabdisthên, 2Co 11:25) by Roman lictors in some Roman colony. If that was here, then Paul and Barnabas were publicly scourged by the lictors before they left. Probably the Jews succeeded in making the Roman officials look on Paul and Barnabas as disturbers of the public peace. So "they cast them out of their borders" (exebalon autous apo tôn horiôn autôn). Second aorist active indicative of ekballô, forcible expulsion plainly as public nuisances. Just a few days before they were the heroes of the city and now!

Verse 51

But they shook off the dust of their feet against them (Hoi de ektinaxamenoî ton koniorton tôn podôn ep' autous). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of ektinassô, to shake out or off. Homer uses it for knocking out teeth. In the papyri. The middle aorist participle occurs again in Acts 18:6 and the active imperative with the dust of the feet in Mark 6:11 (Luke 10:11 has apomassometha). and Mat 10:14 (command of Jesus). It is a dramatic gesture that forbids further intercourse. "As a protest against the injustice which cast them out. The sandal was taken off and the dust shaken out as a symbolic token that the very soil of the country was defiling" (Furneaux). Unto Iconium (eis Ikonion). About 45 miles southeast from Antioch in Pisidia, at the foot of the Taurus mountains. At various times it was reckoned also in Pisidia or Phrygia as well as Lycaonia, Phrygian in population and distinguished by Luke (Acts 14:6) from Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia. As compared with Antioch (a Roman colony) it was a native Phrygian town. When the province of Galatia was divided, Iconium became the capital of Lycaonia and eclipsed Antioch in Pisidia. Strictly speaking at this time Lystra and Derbe were cities of Lycaonia-Galatica while Iconium was in Phrygia-Galatica (all three in the Roman Province of Galatia). It was at the meeting place of several Roman roads and on the highway from east to west. It is still a large town Konieh with 30,000 population.

Verse 52

And the disciples (hoi te or hoi de mathêtai). The Gentile Christians in Antioch in Pisidia. Persecution had precisely the opposite effect to the intention of the Jews for they "were filled with joy and the Holy Spirit" (eplêrounto charas kai pneumatos hagiou). Imperfect passive, they kept on being filled. It had been so before (Acts 4:31; Acts 8:4; Acts 9:31; Acts 12:24). The blood of the martyrs is still the seed of the church.

Verse 1

They entered together (kata to auto eiselthein). Like epi to auto in Acts 3:1. The infinitive eiselthein is the subject of egeneto. So spake that (lalêsai houtôs hôste). Infinitive again parallel to eiselthein. With the result that, actual result here stated with hôste and the aorist infinitive pisteusai (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 999f.) rather than hôste and the indicative like John 3:16. It was a tremendous first meeting.

Verse 2

That were disobedient (hoi apeithêsantes). First aorist active articular participle, not the present apeithountes as the Textus Receptus has it. But the meaning is probably the Jews that disbelieved, rather than that disobeyed. Strictly apeitheô does mean to disobey and apisteô to disbelieve, but that distinction is not observed in John 3:36 nor in Acts 19:9; Acts 28:24. The word apeitheô means to be apeithês, to be unwilling to be persuaded or to withhold belief and then also to withhold obedience. The two meanings run into one another. To disbelieve the word of God is to disobey God. Made them evil affected (ekakôsan). First aorist active indicative of kakoô, old verb from kakos, to do evil to, to ill-treat, then in later Greek as here to embitter, to exasperate as in Ps 105:32 and in Josephus. In this sense only here in the N.T. Evidently Paul preached the same message as in Antioch for it won both Jews and Gentiles, and displeased the rabbis. Codex Bezae adds here that "the chiefs of the synagogue and the rulers" brought persecution upon Paul and Barnabas just as was argued about Antioch. Outside the synagogue the Jews would poison the minds of the Gentiles against Paul and Barnabas. "The story of Thecla suggests a means, and perhaps the apostles were brought before the magistrates on some charge of interference with family life. The magistrates however must have seen at once that there was no legal case against them; and by a sentence of acquittal or in some other way the Lord gave peace" (Rackham). As we have it, the story of Paul and Thecla undoubtedly has apocryphal features, though Thecla may very well be an historical character here at Iconium where the story is located. Certainly the picture of Paul herein drawn cannot be considered authentic though a true tradition may underlie it: "bald, bowlegged, strongly built, small in stature, with large eyes and meeting eyebrows and longish nose; full of grace; sometimes looking like a man, sometimes having the face of an angel."

Verse 3

Long time therefore (hikanon men oun chronon). Accusative of duration of time (possibly six months) and note men oun. There is an antithesis in eschisthê de (verse Acts 14:4) and in verse Acts 14:5 (egeneto de). After the persecution and vindication there was a season of great opportunity which Paul and Barnabas used to the full, "speaking boldly" (parrêsiazomenoi as in Acts 13:46 at Antioch in Pisidia, "in the Lord" (epi tôi kuriôi), upon the basis of the Lord Jesus as in Acts 4:17. And the Lord Jesus "bore witness to the word of his grace" as he always does, "granting signs and wonders to be done by their hands" (didonti sêmeia kai terata ginesthai dia tôn cheirôn autôn). Present participle (didonti) and present infinitive (ginesthai) repetition of both signs and wonders (note both words) just as had happened with Peter and John and the other apostles (Acts 2:43; Acts 4:29; Acts 5:12; cf. Heb 2:4). The time of peace could not last forever with such a work of grace as this. A second explosion of persecution was bound to come and some of the MSS. actually have ek deuterou (a second time).

Verse 4

But the multitude of the city was divided (eschisthê de to plêthos tês poleôs). First aorist passive indicative of schizô, old verb to split, to make a schism or factions as Sadducees and Pharisees (Acts 23:7). This division was within the Gentile populace. Part held (hoi men êsan), literally "some were with the Jews" (sun tois Ioudaiois), part with the apostles (hoi de sun tois apostolois). Common demonstrative of contrast (hoi men, hoi de, Robertson, Grammar, p. 694). The Jewish leaders made some impression on the Gentiles as at Antioch in Pisidia and later at Thessalonica (Acts 17:4). This is the first time in the Acts that Paul and Barnabas are termed "apostles" (see also verse Acts 14:14). Elsewhere in the Acts the word is restricted to the twelve. Certainly Luke does not here employ it in that technical sense. To have followed Jesus in his ministry and to have seen the Risen Christ was essential to the technical use (Acts 1:22). Whether Barnabas had seen the Risen Christ we do not know, but certainly Paul had (1Co 9:1; 1Co 15:8). Paul claimed to be an apostle on a par with the twelve (Gal 1:1, 16-18). The word originally means simply one sent (John 13:16) like messengers of the churches with the collection (2Co 8:23). The Jews used it of those sent from Jerusalem to collect the temple tribute. Paul applies the word to James the Lord's brother (Gal 1:19), to Epaphroditus (Php 2:25) as the messenger of the church in Philippi, to Silvanus and Timothy (1Th 2:6; Acts 18:5), apparently to Apollos (1Co 4:9), and to Andronicus and Junias (Rom 16:6). He even calls the Judaizers "false apostles" (2Co 11:13).

Verse 5

An onset (hormê). A rush or impulse as in Jas 3:4. Old word, but only twice in the N.T. (here and James). It probably denotes not an actual attack so much as the open start, the co-operation of both Jews and Gentiles (the disaffected portion), "with their rulers" (sun tois archousin autôn), that is the rulers of the Jewish synagogue (Acts 13:27). The city officials would hardly join in a mob like this, though Hackett and Rackham think that the city magistrates were also involved as in Antioch in Pisidia (Acts 13:50). To entreat them shamefully (hubrisai). First aorist active infinitive of hubrizô, old verb to insult insolently. See Mat 22:6; Luke 18:32. To stone (lithobolêsai). First aorist active infinitive of lithoboleô, late verb from lithobolos (lithos, stone, ballô, to throw) to pelt with stones, the verb used of the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:58). See on Mat 21:35. The plan to stone them shows that the Jews were in the lead and followed by the Gentile rabble. "Legal proceedings having failed the only resource left for the Jews was illegal violence" (Rackham).

Verse 6

They became aware of it (sunidontes). Second aorist (ingressive) active participle of sunoraô (suneidon), old word to see together, to become conscious of as already in Acts 12:12. In the N.T. only by Luke and Paul. Fled (kataphugon). Second aorist (effective) active indicative of katapheugô, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Heb 6:18. Paul and Barnabas had no idea of remaining to be stoned (lynched) by this mob. It is a wise preacher who always knows when to stand his ground and when to leave for the glory of God. Paul and Barnabas were following the directions of the Lord Jesus given to the twelve on their special tour of Galilee (Mat 10:23). Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia (still part of the Province of Galatia, though in another Regio), not far from the base of the Black Mountain. Professor Sterrett has apparently identified Lystra by an inscription about six hours (18 miles) south-southwest from Iconium near the village Khatyn Serai and Derbe probably near the village Losta or Zosta though its location is really not known. Lystra had been made a colony in B.C. 6 and Derbe was the frontier city of the Roman empire in the southeast. These are the only cities mentioned, but they were of importance and show that Paul kept to his plan of going to centres of influence. The new imperial road from Antioch and Iconium reached these cities. The region round about (tên perichôron) was "a high table land, ill-watered, bleak, but suited for sheep pasture" (Page).

Verse 7

And there they preached the gospel (kakei euaggelizomenoi êsan). Periphrastic imperfect middle. We are to think of extensive evangelistic work perhaps with the assistance of disciples from Antioch and Iconium since Paul and Barnabas could not speak Lycaonian. Kakei is crasis for kai ekei.

Verse 8

At Lystra (en Lustrois). Neuter plural as in Acts 16:2; 2Ti 3:11 while feminine singular in Acts 14:6, 21; Acts 16:1. There was apparently no synagogue in Lystra and so not many Jews. Paul and Barnabas had to do open-air preaching and probably had difficulty in being understood by the natives though both Greek and Latin inscriptions were discovered here by Professor Sterrett in 1885. The incident narrated here (verses Acts 14:8-18) shows how they got a real hearing among these rude heathen. There sat (ekathêto). Imperfect middle of kathêmai. Was sitting. This case is very much like that in Acts 3:1-11, healed by Peter. Possibly outside the gate (verse Acts 14:13) or some public place. Impotent in his feet (adunatos tois posin). Old verbal, but only here in the N.T. in this sense except figuratively in Rom 15:1. Elsewhere it means "impossible" (Mat 19:26). Locative case. Common in medical writers in the sense of "impotent." So Tobit 2:10; 5:9. Had walked (periepatêsen). So best MSS., first aorist active indicative "walked," not periepatêkei, "had walked" (past perfect active).

Verse 9

The same (houtos). Just "this one." Heard (êkouen). Imperfect active, was listening to Paul speaking (lalountos). Either at the gate or in the market place (Acts 17:17) Paul was preaching to such as would listen or could understand his Greek (Koin,). Ramsay (St. Paul the Traveller, pp. 114, 116) thinks that the cripple was a proselyte. At any rate he may have heard of the miracles wrought at Iconium (verse Acts 14:3) and Paul may have spoken of the work of healing wrought by Jesus. This man was "no mendicant pretender," for his history was known from his birth. Fastening his eyes upon him (atenisas autôi). Just as in Acts 13:9 of Paul and Acts 1:10 which see. Paul saw a new hope in the man's eyes and face. He had faith (echei pistin). Present active indicative retained in indirect discourse. To be made whole (tou sôthênai). Genitive of articular first aorist passive infinitive (purpose and result combined) of sôzô, to make sound and also to save. Here clearly to make whole or well as in Luke 7:50 (cf. Acts 3:16; Acts 4:10).

Verse 10

Upright (orthos). Predicate adjective. In this sense Galen and Hippocrates frequently use orthos (erect, straight). Paul spoke in a loud (megalêi) voice so that all could hear and know. He leaped up and walked (hêlato kai periepatei). Rather, He leaped up with a single bound and began to walk. The second aorist middle indicative (with first aorist vowel a) of hallomai (late verb, in papyri) and inchoative imperfect active of peripateô, common verb to walk around. This graphic picture is concealed by the usual English rendering. It is possible that Luke obtained the vivid report of this incident from Timothy who may have witnessed it and who was probably converted during Paul's stay here (Acts 16:3). His father was a prominent Greek and his mother Eunice, possibly a widow, may have lived here with her mother Lois (2Ti 1:5).

Verse 11

Lifted up their voice (epêran tên phônên autôn). First aorist active of epairô. In their excitement they elevated their voices. In the speech of Lycaonia (Lukaonisti). Adverb from verb lukaonizô, to use the language of Lycaonia found here alone, but formed regularly like Ebraisti (John 5:2), Hellênisti (Acts 21:37), Rômaisti (John 19:20). Paul was speaking in Greek, of course, but the excitement of the crowd over the miracle made them cry out in their native tongue which Paul and Barnabas did not understand. Hence it was not till preparations for offering sacrifice to them had begun that Paul understood the new role in which he and Barnabas were held. In the likeness of men (homoiôthentes anthrôpous). First aorist passive participle of homoiô, to liken, with the associative instrumental case. In this primitive state the people hold to the old Graeco-Roman mythology. The story of Baucis and Philemon tells how Jupiter (Zeus) and Mercury (Hermes) visited in human form the neighbouring region of Phrygia (Ovid, Meta. VIII. 626). Jupiter (Zeus) had a temple in Lystra.

Verse 12

They called (ekaloun). Inchoative imperfect began to call. Barnabas, Jupiter (ton Barnaban Dia). Because Barnabas was the older and the more imposing in appearance. Paul admits that he was not impressive in looks (2Co 10:10). And Paul, Mercury (ton de Paulon Hermên). Mercury (Hermês) was the messenger of the gods, and the spokesman of Zeus. Hermês was of beautiful appearance and eloquent in speech, the inventor of speech in legend. Our word hermeneutics or science of interpretation comes from this word (Heb 7:2; John 1:38). Because he was the chief speaker (epeidê autos ên ho hêgoumenos tou logou). Paul was clearly "the leader of the talk." So it seemed a clear case to the natives. If preachers always knew what people really think of them! Whether Paul was alluding to his experience in Lystra or not in Gal 4:14, certainly they did receive him as an angel of God, as if "Mercury" in reality.

Verse 13

Whose temple was before the city (tou ontos pro tês pôleôs). The god (Zeus) is identified with his temple. He had a statue and temple there. Oxen and garlands (taurous kai stemmata). Probably garlands to put on the oxen before they were slain. It was common to sacrifice bullocks to Jupiter and Mercury. Would have done sacrifice (êthelen thuein). Imperfect indicative, wanted to offer sacrifice. He was planning to do it, and his purpose now became plain to Paul and Barnabas.

Verse 14

Having heard (akousantes). Such elaborate preparation "with the multitudes" (sun tois ochlois) spread rumours and some who spoke Greek told Paul and Barnabas. It is possible that the priest of Jupiter may have sent a formal request that the visiting "gods" might come out to the statue by the temple gates to make it a grand occasion. They rent their garments (diarrêxantes). First aorist active participle from diarrêgnumi, old verb to rend in two. Like the high priest in Mat 26:65 as if an act of sacrilege was about to be committed. It was strange conduct for the supposed gods! Sprang forth (exepêdêsan). First aorist (ingressive) active indicative of ekpêdaô (note ek), old verb, here only in the N.T. It was all a sign of grief and horror with loud outcries (krazontes).

Verse 15

Sirs (andres). Literally, Men. Abrupt, but courteous. We also are men of like passions with you (kai hêmeis homoiopatheis esmen humin anthrôpoi). Old adjective from homoios (like) and paschô, to experience. In the N.T. only here and Jas 5:17. It means "of like nature" more exactly and affected by like sensations, not "gods" at all. Their conduct was more serious than the obeisance of Cornelius to Peter (Acts 10:25). Humin is associative instrumental case. And bring you good tidings (euaggelizomenoi). No "and" in the Greek, just the present middle participle, "gospelizing you." They are not gods, but evangelists. Here we have Paul's message to a pagan audience without the Jewish environment and he makes the same line of argument seen in Acts 17:21-32; Rom 1:18-23. At Antioch in Pisidia we saw Paul's line of approach to Jews and proselytes (Acts 13:16-41). That ye should turn from these vain things (apo toutôn tôn mataiôn epistrephein). He boldly calls the worship of Jupiter and Mercury and all idols "vain" or empty things, pointing to the statues and the temple. Unto the living God (epi theon zônta). They must go the whole way. Our God is a live God, not a dead statue. Paul is fond of this phrase (2Co 6:16; Rom 9:26). Who made (hos epoiêsen). The one God is alive and is the Creator of the Universe just as Paul will argue in Athens (Acts 17:24). Paul here quotes Ps 146:6 and has Gen 1:1 in mind. See also 1Th 1:9 where a new allegiance is also claimed as here.

Verse 16

In the generations gone by (en tais parôichêmenais geneais). Perfect middle participle from paroichomai, to go by, old verb, here alone in the N.T. Suffered (eiasen). Constativ aorist active indicative of eaô (note syllabic augment). Paul here touches God in history as he did just before in creation. God's hand is on the history of all the nations (Gentile and Jew), only with the Gentiles he withdrew the restraints of his grace in large measure (Acts 17:30; Rom 1:24, 26, 28), judgment enough for their sins. To walk in their ways (poreuesthai tais hodois autôn). Present middle infinitive, to go on walking, with locative case without en. This philosophy of history does not mean that God was ignorant or unconcerned. He was biding his time in patience.

Verse 17

And yet (kaitoi). Old Greek compound particle (kai toi). In the N.T. twice only, once with finite verb as here, once with the participle (Heb 4:3). Without witness (amarturon). Old adjective (a privative and martus, witness), only here in the N.T. Left (aphêken). First aorist active (k aorist indicative of aphiêmi). In that he did good (agathourgôn). Present active causal participle of agathourgeô, late and rare verb (also agathoergeô 1Ti 6:18), reading of the oldest MSS. here for agathopoieô, to do good. Note two other causal participles here parallel with agathourgôn, viz., didous ("giving you") present active of didômi, empiplôn ("filling") present active of empimplaô (late form of empimplêmi). This witness to God (his doing good, giving rains and fruitful seasons, filling your hearts with food and gladness) they could receive without the help of the Old Testament revelation (Rom 1:20). Zeus was regarded as the god of rain (Jupiter Pluvius) and Paul claims the rain and the fruitful (karpophorous, karpos, and pherô, fruit bearing, old word, here alone in N.T.) seasons as coming from God. Lycaonia was often dry and it would be an appropriate item. "Mercury, as the God of merchandise, was also the dispenser of food" (Vincent). Paul does not talk about laws of nature as if they governed themselves, but he sees the living God "behind the drama of the physical world" (Furneaux). These simple country people could grasp his ideas as he claims everything for the one true God. Gladness (euphrosunês). Old word from euphrôn (eu and phrên), good cheer. In the N.T. only Acts 2:28 and here. Cheerfulness should be our normal attitude when we consider God's goodness. Paul does not here mention Christ because he had the single definite purpose to dissuade them from worshipping Barnabas and himself.

Verse 18

Scarce (molis). Adverb in same sense as old mogis, from molos, toil. Restrained (katepausan). Effective first aorist active indicative of katapauô, old verb in causative sense to make abstain from. From doing sacrifice unto them (tou mê thuein autois). Ablative case of the articular infinitive with redundant negative after katepausan, regular Greek idiom (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1094, 1171). It had been a harrowing and well-nigh a horrible ordeal, but finally Paul had won. If only nobody else had interposed!

Verse 19

But there came thither Jews from Antioch and Iconium (Epêlthan de apo Antiocheias kai Ikoniou Ioudaioi). Came to or upon them, epêlthan, second aorist (ingressive) indicative of eperchomai. Whether news of the miracle had reached those cities we do not know. These may have been travelling grain merchants. At any rate there was an interval in which Paul and Barnabas won some disciples (verse Acts 14:22). There would be a natural reaction, even revulsion, in the minds of many who had come so near to worshipping Paul and Barnabas. The pendulum swings easily from one extreme to the other. The hostile Jews from Antioch and Iconium may even have followed Paul and Barnabas along the fine Roman road on purpose to keep them on the run. They had driven them out of Antioch and out of Iconium and now appear at Lystra at an opportune moment for their work. Having persuaded the multitudes (peisantes tous ochlous). First aorist (effective) active participle of peithô. They had complete success with many and struck at the psychological moment. They stoned Paul (lithasantes ton Paulon). First aorist active participle of lithazô, late verb from lithos for throwing stones (used by Paul referring to this one incident when alone he was stoned, 2Co 11:25). The wounds inflicted may have left some of the scars (stigmata) mentioned in Gal 6:17. They stoned Paul as the chief speaker (Mercury) and passed by Barnabas (Jupiter). It was a Jewish mode of punishment as against Stephen and these Jews knew that Paul was the man that they had to deal with. Hackett notes that the Jews with two exceptions incited the persecutions which Paul endured. The exceptions were in Philippi (Acts 16:16-40) and Ephesus (Acts 19:23-41). Dragged him out of the city (esuron exô tês poleôs). They hurled Stephen outside of the city before stoning him (7:58). It was a hurried and irregular proceeding, but they were dragging (imperfect active of surô, old verb) Paul out now. Supposing that he were dead (nomizontes auton tethnêkenai). Present active participle with infinitive (second perfect active of thnêskô) in indirect discourse with accusative of general reference. The Jews are jubilant this time with memories of Paul's escape at Antioch and Iconium. The pagan mob feel that they have settled accounts for their narrow escape from worshipping two Jewish renegade preachers. It was a good day's work for them all. Luke does not say that Paul was actually dead.

Verse 20

Stood round about him (kuklôsantôn auton). Genitive absolute with first aorist active participle of kukloô, old verb from kuklos (circle, cycle) to make a circle round, to encircle. The would-be murderers left and a group of disciples gathered round to see if Paul was dead or alive and, if dead, to bury him. In that group Timothy may very well have been along with Eunice and Barnabas. Timothy, a lad of about fifteen, would not soon forget that solemn scene (2Ti 3:11). But Paul suddenly (apparently a miraculous recovery) rose up (anastas) and entered the city to the surprise and joy of the disciples who were willing to brave persecution with Paul. With Barnabas (sun tôi Barnabâi). With the assistance of Barnabas. It was plainly unwise to continue in Lystra so that they set out on the next day (têi epaurion, ten times in Acts), shaken and bruised as Paul was. Derbe was some forty miles distant, near the pass to the Cilician Gates.

Verse 21

When they had preached the gospel to that city (euaggelisamenoi tên polin ekeinên). Having evangelized (first aorist middle participle) that city, a smaller city and apparently with no trouble from the Jews. Had made many disciples (mathêteusantes hikanous). First aorist active participle of mathêteuô from mathêtês, a learner or disciple. Late verb in Plutarch, to be a disciple (Mat 27:57 like John 19:38) and then to disciple (old English, Spenser), to make a disciple as in Mat 28:19 and here. Paul and Barnabas were literally here obeying the command of Jesus in discipling people in this heathen city. They returned to Lystra and to Iconium, and to Antioch (hupestrepsan eis tēn Lustran kai eis Ikonion kai eis Antiocheian). Derbe was the frontier city of the Roman empire. The quickest way to return to Antioch in Syria would have been by the Cilician Gates or by the pass over Mt. Taurus by which Paul and Silas will come to Derbe in the second tour (Acts 15:41-16:1), but difficult to travel in winter. But it was necessary to revisit the churches in Lystra, Iconium, Antioch in Pisidia and to see that they were able to withstand persecution. Paul was a Roman citizen though he had not made use of this privilege as yet for his own protection. Against mob violence it would count for little, but he did not hesitate. Paul had been stoned in Lystra, threatened in Iconium, expelled in Antioch. He shows his wisdom in conserving his work.

Verse 22

Confirming (epistêrizontes). Late verb (in LXX), in N.T. only in Acts 14:22; Acts 15:32, 41, to make more firm, to give additional (epi) strength. Each time in Acts the word is used concerning these churches. To continue in the faith (emmenein tēi pistei). To remain in with locative, old verb. It is possible that pistis here has the notion of creed as Paul uses it later (Col 1:23 with epimenô; 1Ti 5:8). It seems to be here more than trust or belief. These recent converts from heathenism were ill-informed, were persecuted, had broken family and social ties, greatly needed encouragement if they were to hold out. We must (dei hêmâs). It does not follow from this use of "we" that Luke was present, since it is a general proposition applying to all Christians at all times (2Ti 3:12). Luke, of course, approved this principle. Knowling asks why Timothy may not have told Luke about Paul's work. It all sounds like quotation of Paul's very language. Note the change of construction here after parakalountes (infinitive of indirect command, emmenein, but hoti dei, indirect assertion). They needed the right understanding of persecution as we all do. Paul frankly warned these new converts in this heathen environment of the many tribulations through which they must enter the Kingdom of God (the culmination at last) as he did at Ephesus (Acts 20:20) and as Jesus had done (John 16:33). These saints were already converted.

Verse 23

And when they had appointed for them elders in every church (cheirotoneōsantes de autois kat' ekklēsian presbuteros). They needed also some form of organization, though already churches. Note distributive use of kata with ekklēsian (Acts 2:46; Acts 5:42; Tit 1:5). Cheirotoneō (from cheirotonos, extending the hand, cheir, hand, and teinō, to stretch) is an old verb that originally meant to vote by show of the hands, finally to appoint with the approval of an assembly that chooses as in 2Co 8:19, and then to appoint without regard to choice as in Josephus (Ant. XIII. 2, 2) of the appointment of Jonathan as high priest by Alexander. So in Acts 10:41 the compound procheirotoneō is used of witnesses appointed by God. But the seven (deacons) were first selected by the Jerusalem church and then appointed (katastēsomen) by the apostles. That is probably the plan contemplated by Paul in his directions to Titus (Tit 1:5) about the choice of elders. It is most likely that this plan was the one pursued by Paul and Barnabas with these churches. They selected the elders in each instance and Paul and Barnabas "ordained" them as we say, though the word cheirotoneō does not mean that. "Elders" were mentioned first in Acts 11:30. Later Paul will give the requirements expected in these "elders" or "bishops" (Php 1:1) as in 1Ti 3:1-7; Tit 1:5-9. It is fairly certain that these elders were chosen to correspond in a general way with the elders in the Jewish synagogue after which the local church was largely copied as to organization and worship. Paul, like Jesus, constantly worshipped and spoke in the synagogues. Already it is plain, as at Antioch in Syria (Acts 11:26), that the Christians can no longer count on the use of the Jewish synagogue. They must have an organization of their own. The use of the plural here implies what was true at Philippi (Php 1:1) and Ephesus (Acts 20:17, 28) that each church (one in each city) "had its college of elders" (Hackett) as in Jerusalem (Acts 21:18). Elder (presbuteros) was the Jewish name and bishop (episkopos) the Greek name for the same office. "Those who are called elders in speaking of Jewish communities are called bishops in speaking of Gentile communities" (Hackett). Hovey rightly holds against Hackett that teaching was a normal function of these elders, pastors or bishops as they were variously called (1Ti 3:2; Tit 1:9; 1Co 12:28, 30; Eph 4:11). Had prayed with fasting (proseuxamenoi meta nēsteiōn). It was a serious matter, this formal setting apart of these "elders" in the churches. So it was done in a public meeting with prayer and fasting as when Paul and Barnabas were sent forth from Antioch in Syria (Acts 13:3) on this mission tour. They commended them to the Lord (parethento autous tōi kuriōi). Second aorist middle indicative of paratithēmi. Old and solemn word, to entrust, to deposit as in a bank (1Ti 1:18; 2Ti 2:2). Cf. parathêkē in 1Ti 6:20; 2Ti 1:12, 14. It was all that they could now do, to commit them to the Lord Jesus. Jesus used this word on the cross (Luke 22:32). On whom they had believed (eis hon pepisteukeisan). Past perfect indicative (without augment) of pisteuō. They had "trusted" in Jesus (2Ti 1:12) and Paul now "entrusts" them to him with confidence. It was a solemn and serious occasion in each instance as it always is to set apart men for the ministry. These men may not have been ideal men for this service, but they were the only ones available and they were chosen from the actual membership in each instance, men who knew local conditions and problems.

Verse 24

When they had spoken the word in Perga (lalēsantes en Pergēi ton logon). Now they stopped and preached in Perga which they had apparently not done before (see Acts 13:13). After leaving Antioch they passed on through Pisidia, as if Antioch was not strictly in Pisidia (see on Acts 13:14) and into Pamphylia. They crossed from Perga to Attaleia, the port of Perga, sixteen miles down the Cestus, and capital of Pamphylia, to find a ship for Antioch in Syria. It is now called Adala and for long was the chief harbour of the south coast of Asia Minor. We do not know why they did not revisit Cyprus, perhaps because no permanent Gentile churches were founded there.

Verse 26

They sailed away to Antioch (aupleusan eis Antiocheian). Effective aorist active indicative of apopleō, to sail off. They had been gone some eighteen months. They had been committed (êsan paradedomenoi). Periphrastic past perfect passive of paradidōmi, old and common verb. High and serious thoughts filled the hearts of these first returned missionaries as they neared home. The grace of God had been with them. They had fulfilled (eplêrôsan) the work to which they had been set apart by the Holy Spirit with the prayers of the Antioch church. They now had a wondrous story to tell.

Verse 27

Gathered the church together (sunagagontes tên ekklêsian). Second aorist active participle of sunagô. It "was the first missionary meeting in history" (Furneaux). It was not hard to get the church together when the news spread that Paul and Barnabas had returned. "The suitability of the Gospel to become the religion of the world had not before been put to the test" (Furneaux). Doubtless many "wise-acres" had predicted failure as they did for William Carey and for Adoniram Judson and Luther Rice. Rehearsed (anêggellon). Imperfect active. It was a long story for they had many things to tell of God's dealings "with them" (met' autôn) for God had been "with them" all the while as Jesus had said he would be (Mat 28:20, meth' hûmôn). Paul could recount some of the details given later in 2Co 11:1ff. And how (kai hoti). Or "and that" in particular, as the upshot of it all. He had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles (ênoixen tois ethnesin thuran pisteôs). Three times in Paul's Epistles (1Co 16:9; 2Co 2:12; Col 4:3) he employed the metaphor of "door," perhaps a reminiscence of the very language of Paul here. This work in Galatia gained a large place in Paul's heart (Gal 4:14). The Gentiles now, it was plain, could enter the kingdom of God (verse Acts 14:22) through the door of faith, not by law or by circumcision or by heathen philosophy or mythology.

Verse 28

And they tarried no little time (diatribon de chronon ouk oligon). Imperfect active of diatribô, old verb to rub hard, to consume, with accusative of extent of time. It was a happy time of fellowship. The experiment entered upon by the church of Antioch was now a pronounced success. It was at the direct command of the Holy Spirit, but they had prayed for the absent missionaries and rejoiced at their signal success. There is no sign of jealousy on the part of Barnabas when Paul returns as the chief hero of the expedition. A new corner has been turned in the history of Christianity. There is a new centre of Christian activity. What will Jerusalem think of the new developments at Antioch? Paul and Barnabas made no report to Jerusalem.

Verse 1

And certain men came down from Judea (kai tines katelthontes apo tês Ioudaias). Evidently the party of the circumcision in the church in Jerusalem (Acts 11:2) had heard of the spread of the gospel among the Gentiles in Cyprus, Pamphylia, and South Galatia (Phrygia, Pisidia, Lycaonia). Possibly John Mark after his desertion at Perga (Acts 13:13) told of this as one of his reasons for coming home. At any rate echoes of the jubilation in Antioch in Syria would be certain to reach Jerusalem. The Judaizers in Jerusalem, who insisted that all the Gentile Christians must become Jews also, had acquiesced in the case of Cornelius and his group (Acts 11:1-18) after plain proof by Peter that it was the Lord's doing. But they had not agreed to a formal campaign to turn the exception into the rule and to make Christianity mainly Gentile with a few Jews instead of mainly Jewish with a few Gentiles. Since Paul and Barnabas did not come up to Jerusalem, the leaders among the Judaizers decided to go down to Antioch and attack Paul and Barnabas there. They had volunteered to go without church action in Jerusalem for their activity is disclaimed by the conference (Acts 15:24). In Gal 2:4 Paul with some heat describes these Judaizers as "false brethren, secretly introduced who sneaked in to spy out our liberty." It is reasonably certain that this visit to Jerusalem described in Gal 2:1-10 is the same one as the Jerusalem Conference in Acts Acts 15:5-29 in spite of the effort of Ramsay to identify it with that in Acts 11:29. Paul in Galatians is not giving a list of his visits to Jerusalem. He is showing his independence of the twelve apostles and his equality with them. He did not see them in Acts 11:29, but only "the elders." In Acts 15 Luke gives the outward narrative of events, in Gal 2:1-10 Paul shows us the private interview with the apostles when they agreed on their line of conduct toward the Judaizers. In Gal 2:2 by the use of "them" (autois) Paul seems to refer to the first public meeting in Acts before the private interview that came in between verses Acts 15:5-6. If we recall the difficulty that Peter had on the subject of preaching the gospel to the heathen (Acts 10:1-11:18), we can the better understand the attitude of the Judaizers. They were men of sincere convictions without a doubt, but they were obscurantists and unable and unwilling to receive new light from the Lord on a matter that involved their racial and social prejudices. They recalled that Jesus himself had been circumcised and that he had said to the Syro-Phoenician woman that he had come only save to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (Mat 15:24). They argued that Christ had not repealed circumcision. So one of the great religious controversies of all time was begun, that between spiritual religion and ritualistic or ceremonial religion. It is with us yet with baptism taking the place of circumcision. These self-appointed champions of circumcision for Gentile Christians were deeply in earnest. Taught the brethren (edidaskon tous adelphous). Inchoative imperfect active, began to teach and kept it up. Their attitude was one of supercilious superiority. They probably resented the conduct of Barnabas, who, when sent by the Church in Jerusalem to investigate the conversion of the Greeks in Antioch (Acts 11:20-26), did not return and report till a strong church had been established there with the help of Saul and only then with a big collection to confuse the issue. Paul and Barnabas were on hand, but the Judaizers persisted in their efforts to force their views on the church in Antioch. It was a crisis. Except ye be circumcised after the custom of Moses, ye cannot be saved (ean me peritmêthête tôi ethei Môuseôs, ou dunasthe sôthênai). There was the dictum of the Judaizers to the Gentiles. Paul and Barnabas had been circumcised. This is probably the precise language employed, for they spoke in Greek to these Greeks. It is a condition of the third class (undetermined, but with prospect of being determined, ean plus the first aorist passive subjunctive of peritemnô). There was thus hope held out for them, but only on condition that they be circumcised. The issue was sharply drawn. The associative instrumental case (tôi ethei) is customary. "Saved" (sôthênai) here is the Messianic salvation. This doctrine denied the efficacy of the work of Christ.

When Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and questioning with them (Genomenês staseôs kai zêtêseôs ouk oligês tôi Paulôi kai Barnabâi pros autous). Genitive absolute of second aoist middle participle of ginomai, genitive singular agreeing with first substantive staseôs. Literally, "No little (litotes for much) strife and questioning coming to Paul and Barnabas (dative case) with them " (pros autous, face to face with them). Paul and Barnabas were not willing to see this Gentile church brow-beaten and treated as heretics by these self-appointed regulators of Christian orthodoxy from Jerusalem. The work had developed under the leadership of Paul and Barnabas and they accepted full responsibility for it and stoutly resisted these Judaizers to the point of sedition (riot, outbreak in Luke 23:25; Acts 19:40) as in Acts 23:7. There is no evidence that the Judaizers had any supporters in the Antioch church so that they failed utterly to make any impression. Probably these Judaizers compelled Paul to think through afresh his whole gospel of grace and so they did Paul and the world a real service. If the Jews like Paul had to believe, it was plain that there was no virtue in circumcision (Gal 2:15-21). It is not true that the early Christians had no disagreements. They had selfish avarice with Ananias and Sapphira, murmuring over the gifts to the widows, simony in the case of Simon Magus, violent objection to work in Caesarea, and now open strife over a great doctrine (grace vs. legalism). The brethren appointed (etaxan). "The brethren" can be supplied from verse Acts 15:1 and means the church in Antioch. The church clearly saw that the way to remove this deadlock between the Judaizers and Paul and Barnabas was to consult the church in Jerusalem to which the Judaizers belonged. Paul and Barnabas had won in Antioch. If they can win in Jerusalem, that will settle the matter. The Judaizers will be answered in their own church for which they are presuming to speak. The verb etaxan (tassô, to arrange) suggests a formal appointment by the church in regular assembly. Paul (Gal 2:2) says that he went up by revelation (kat' apokalupsin), but surely that is not contradictory to the action of the church. Certain others of them (tinias allous). Certainly Titus (Gal 2:1, 3), a Greek and probably a brother of Luke who is not mentioned in Acts. Rackham thinks that Luke was in the number. The apostles and elders (tous apostolous kai presbuterous). Note one article for both (cf. "the apostles and the brethren" in Acts 11:1). "Elders" now (Acts 11:30) in full force. The apostles have evidently returned now to the city after the death of Herod Agrippa I stopped the persecution.

Verse 3

They therefore (hoi men oun). Luke's favourite method of resumptive narrative as we have seen (Acts 11:19, etc.), demonstrative hoi with men (indeed) and oun (therefore). Being brought on their way by the church (propemphentes hupo tēs ekklēsiās). First aorist passive participle of propempō, old verb, to send forward under escort as a mark of honour as in Acts 20:38; Acts 21:5; 3Jn 1:6. They were given a grand send-off by the church in Antioch. Passed through (diērchonto). Imperfect middle describing the triumphal procession through both (te kai) Phoenicia and Samaria. The conversion (tên epistrophên). The turning. They caused great joy (epoioun charan megalên). Imperfect active. They were raising a constant paean of praise as they proceeded toward Jerusalem. Probably the Judaizers had gone on or kept still.

Verse 4

Were received (paredechthēsan). First aorist passive indicative of paradechomai, old verb, to receive, to welcome. Here it was a public reception for Paul and Barnabas provided by the whole church including the apostles and elders, at which an opportunity was given to hear the story of Paul and Barnabas about God's dealings with them among the Gentiles. This first public meeting is referred to by Paul in Gal 2:2 "I set before them (autois) the gospel, etc."

Verse 5

But there rose up (exanestēsan de). Second aorist active indicative (intransitive). Note both ex and an. These men rose up out of the crowd at a critical moment. They were believers in Christ (pepisteukotes, having believed), but were still members of "the sect of the Pharisees" (tēs haireseōs tōn Pharisaiōn). Evidently they still held to the Pharisaic narrowness shown in the attack on Peter (Acts 11:2). Note the dogmatism of their "must" (dei) after the opposition of Paul and Barnabas to their "except" (ean me) at Antioch (Acts 15:1). They are unconvinced and expected to carry the elders with them. Codex Bezae says that they had appealed to the elders (Acts 15:2, 5). At any rate they have made the issue in open meeting at the height of the jubilation. It is plain from verse Acts 15:6 that this meeting was adjourned, for another gathering came together then. It is here that the private conference of which Paul speaks in Gal 2:1-10 took place. It was Paul's chance to see the leaders in Jerusalem (Peter, James, and John) and he won them over to his view of Gentile liberty from the Mosaic law so that the next public conference (Acts 15:6-29) ratified heartily the views of Paul, Barnabas, Peter, James, and John. It was a diplomatic triumph of the first order and saved Christianity from the bondage of Jewish ceremonial sacramentalism. So far as we know this is the only time that Paul and John met face to face, the great spirits in Christian history after Jesus our Lord. It is a bit curious to see men saying today that Paul surrendered about Titus and had him circumcised for the sake of peace, the very opposite of what he says in Galatians, "to whom I yielded, no not for an hour." Titus as a Greek was a red flag to the Judaizers and to the compromisers, but Paul stood his ground.

Verse 6

Were gathered together (sunêchthêsan). First aorist (effective) passive indicative. The church is not named here as in verse Acts 15:4, but we know from verses Acts 15:12-22 that the whole church came together this time also along with the apostles and elders. Of this matter (peri tou logou toutou). Same idiom in Acts 8:21; Acts 19:38. They realized the importance of the issue.

Verse 7

When there had been much questioning (pollês zêtêseôs genomenês). Genitive absolute with second aorist middle participle of ginomai. Evidently the Judaizers were given full opportunity to air all their grievances and objections. They were allowed plenty of time and there was no effort to shut off debate or to rush anything through the meeting. Peter rose up (anastas Petros). The wonder was that he had waited so long. Probably Paul asked him to do so. He was the usual spokesman for the apostles and his activities in Jerusalem were well-known. In particular his experience at Caesarea (Acts 10:24-48) had caused trouble here in Jerusalem from this very same party of the circumcision (Acts 11:1-18). It was fitting that Peter should speak. This is the last time that Peter appears in the Acts. A good while ago (aph' hêmerôn archaiôn). From ancient days. The adjective archaios is from archê, beginning, and its actual age is a matter of relativity. So Mnason (Acts 21:16) is termed "an ancient disciple." It was probably a dozen years since God "made choice" (exelexato) to speak by Peter's mouth to Cornelius and the other Gentiles in Caesarea. His point is that what Paul and Barnabas have reported is nothing new. The Judaizers made objection then as they are doing now.

Verse 8

Which knoweth the heart (kardiognôstês). Late word from kardia (heart) and gnôstês (known, ginôskô). In the N.T. only here and Acts 1:24 which see. Giving them the Holy Spirit (dous to pneuma to hagion). And before their baptism. This was the Lord's doing. They had accepted (Acts 11:18) this witness of God then and it was true now of these other Gentile converts.

Verse 9

He made no distinction between us and them (outhen diekrinen metaxu hêmôn te kai autôn). He distinguished nothing (first aorist active ind.) between (both dia and metaxu) both (te kai) us and them. In the matter of faith and conversion God treated us Jews as heathen and the heathen as Jews. Cleansing their hearts by faith (têi pistei katharisas tas kardias autôn). Not by works nor by ceremonies. Peter here has a thoroughly Pauline and Johannine idea of salvation for all both Jew and Greek. Cf. Acts 10:15.

Verse 10

Why tempt ye God? (ti peirazete ton theon;). By implying that God had made a mistake this time, though right about Cornelius. It is a home-thrust. They were refusing to follow the guidance of God like the Israelites at Massah and Meribah (Ex 17:7; Deut 6:16; 1Co 10:9). That ye should put (epitheinai). Second aorist active infinitive of epitithêmi, epexegetic, explaining the tempting. A yoke upon the neck (zugon epi ton trachêlon). Familiar image of oxen with yokes upon the necks. Paul's very image for the yoke of bondage of the Mosaic law in Gal 5:1. It had probably been used in the private interview. Cf. the words of Jesus about the Pharisees (Mat 23:4) and how easy and light his own yoke is (Mat 11:30). Were able to bear (ischusamen bastasai). Neither our fathers nor we had strength (ischuô) to carry this yoke which the Judaizers wish to put on the necks of the Gentiles. Peter speaks as the spiritual emancipator. He had been slow to see the meaning of God's dealings with him at Joppa and Caesarea, but he has seen clearly by now. He takes his stand boldly with Paul and Barnabas for Gentile freedom.

Verse 11

That we shall be saved (sôthênai). First aorist passive infinitive in indirect discourse after pisteuomen. More exactly, "We believe that we are saved through the grace of the Lord Jesus in like manner as they also." This thoroughly Pauline note shows that whatever hopes the Judaizers had about Peter were false. His doctrine of grace is as clear as a bell. He has lifted his voice against salvation by ceremony and ritualism. It was a great deliverance.

Verse 12

Kept silence (esigêsen). Ingressive first aorist active of sigâô, old verb, to hold one's peace. All the multitude became silent after Peter's speech and because of it. Hearkened (êkouon). Imperfect active of akouô, descriptive of the rapt attention, were listening. Unto Barnabas and Paul (Barnaba kai Paulou). Note placing Barnabas before Paul as in verse Acts 15:25, possibly because in Jerusalem Barnabas was still better known than Paul. Rehearsing (exêgoumenôn). Present middle participle of exêgeomai, old verb, to go through or lead out a narrative of events as in Luke 24:35; Acts 10:8 which see. Three times (Acts 14:27; Acts 15:4, 12) Paul is described as telling the facts about their mission work, facts more eloquent than argument (Page). One of the crying needs in the churches is fuller knowledge of the facts of mission work and progress with enough detail to give life and interest. The signs and wonders which God had wrought among the Gentiles set the seal of approval on the work done through (dia) Barnabas and Paul. This had been Peter's argument about Cornelius (Acts 11:17). This same verb (exêgêsato) is used by James in verse Acts 15:14 referring to Peter's speech.

Verse 13

After they had held their peace (meta to sigêsai autous). Literally, "after the becoming silent (ingressive aorist active of the articular infinitive) as to them (Barnabas and Paul, accusative of general reference)." James answered (apekrithê Iakôbos). First aorist passive (deponent) indicative. It was expected that James, as President of the Conference, would speak last. But he wisely waited to give every one an opportunity to speak. The challenge of the Judaizers called for an opinion from James. Furneaux thinks that he may have been elected one of the twelve to take the place of James the brother of John since Paul (Gal 1:19) calls him apostle. More likely he was asked to preside because of his great gifts and character as chief of the elders.

Hearken unto me (akousate mou). Usual appeal for attention. James was termed James the Just and was considered a representative of the Hebraic as opposed to the Hellenistic wing of the Jewish Christians (Acts 6:1). The Judaizers had doubtless counted on him as a champion of their view and did later wrongfully make use of his name against Peter at Antioch (Gal 2:12). There was instant attention when James began to speak. Symeon (Sumeôn). The Aramaic form of Simon as in 2Pe 2:1. This little touch would show his affinities with the Jewish Christians (not the Judaizers). This Aramaic form is used also in Luke 2:25, 34 of the old prophet in the temple. Possibly both forms (Symeon, Aramaic, and Simon, Greek) were current in Jerusalem. How (kathôs). Strictly, "according as," here like hos in indirect discourse somewhat like the expegetic or explanatory use in 3Jn 1:3. First (prôton). Told by Peter in verse Acts 15:7. James notes, as Peter did, that this experience of Barnabas and Paul is not the beginning of work among the Gentiles. Did visit (epeskepsato). First aorist middle indicative of episkeptomai, old verb to look upon, to look after, provide for. This same verb occurs in Jas 1:27 and is one of various points of similarity between this speech of James in Acts and the Epistle of James as shown by Mayor in his Commentary on James. Somehow Luke may have obtained notes of these various addresses. To take from the Gentiles a people for his name (labein ex ethnôn laon tôi onomati autou). Bengel calls this egregium paradoxon, a chosen people (laon) out of the Gentiles (ethnôn). This is what is really involved in what took place at Caesarea at the hands of Peter and the campaign of Barnabas and Paul from Antioch. But such a claim of God's purpose called for proof from Scripture to convince Jews and this is precisely what James undertakes to give. This new Israel from among the Gentiles is one of Paul's great doctrines as set forth in Gal 3:1-29; Rom 9:1-11:36. Note the use of God's "name" here for "the Israel of God" (Gal 6:16).

Verse 15

To this agree (toutôi sumphônousin). Associative instrumental case (toutôi) after sumphônousin (voice together with, symphony with, harmonize with), from sumphôneô, old verb seen already in Mat 18:19; Luke 5:36; Acts 5:9 which see. James cites only Amos 9:11, 12 from the LXX as an example of "the words of the prophets" (hoi logoi tôn prophêtôn) to which he refers on this point. The somewhat free quotation runs here through verses Acts 15:16-18 of Ac 15 and is exceedingly pertinent. The Jewish rabbis often failed to understand the prophets as Jesus showed. The passage in Amos refers primarily to the restoration of the Davidic empire, but also the Messiah's Kingdom (the throne of David his father," Luke 1:32).

Verse 16

I will build again (anoikodomêsô). Here LXX has anastêsô. Compound (ana, up or again) of oikodomeô, the verb used by Jesus in Mat 16:18 of the general church or kingdom as here which see. The tabernacle of David (tên skênên Daueid), a poetical figure of the throne of David (2Sa 7:12) now "the fallen tent" (tên peptôkuian), perfect active participle of piptô, state of completion. The ruins thereof (ta katestrammena autês). Literally, "the ruined portions of it." Perfect passive participle of katastrephô, to turn down. It is a desolate picture of the fallen, torn down tent of David. I will let it up (anorthôsô). Old verb from anorthoô (ana, orthos), to set upright. See on Luke 3:13 of the old woman whose crooked back was set straight.

Verse 17

That the residue of men may seek after the Lord (hopôs an ekzêtêsôsin hoi kataloipoi tôn anthrôpôn ton kurion). The use of hopôs with the subjunctive (effective aorist active) to express purpose is common enough and note an for an additional tone of uncertainty. On the rarity of an with hopôs in the Koin, see Robertson, Grammar, p. 986. Here the Gentiles are referred to. The Hebrew text is quite different, "that they may possess the remnant of Edom." Certainly the LXX suits best the point that James is making. But the closing words of this verse point definitely to the Gentiles both in the Hebrew and the LXX, "all the Gentiles" (panta ta ethnê). Another item of similarity between this speech and the Epistle of James is in the phrase "my name is called" (epikeklêtai to onoma mou) and Jas 2:7. The purpose of God, though future, is expressed by this perfect passive indicative epikeklêtai from epi-kaleô, to call on. It is a Jewish way of speaking of those who worship God.

Verse 18

From the beginning of the world (ap' aiônos). Or, "from of old." James adds these words, perhaps with a reminiscence of Isa 45:21. His point is that this purpose of God, as set forth in Amos, is an old one. God has an Israel outside of and beyond the Jewish race, whom he will make his true "Israel" and so there is no occasion for surprise in the story of God's dealings with the Gentiles as told by Barnabas and Paul. God's eternal purpose of grace includes all who call upon his name in every land and people (Isa 2:1; Mic 4:1). This larger and richer purpose and plan of God was one of the mysteries which Paul will unfold in the future (Rom 16:25; Eph 3:9). James sees it clearly now. God is making it known (poiôn tauta gnôsta), if they will only be willing to see and understand. It was a great deliverance that James had made and it exerted a profound influence on the assembly.

Verse 19

Wherefore (dio). "Because of which," this plain purpose of God as shown by Amos and Isaiah. My judgment is (egô krinô). Note expression of egô. I give my judgment. (Ego censeo). James sums up the case as President of the Conference in a masterly fashion and with that consummate wisdom for which he is noted. It amounts to a resolution for the adoption by the assembly as happened (verse Acts 15:33). That we trouble not (mê parenochlein). Present active infinitive with mê in an indirect command (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1046) of parenochleô, a common late verb, occurring here alone in the N.T. This double compound (para, en) is from the old compound enochleô (en and ochlos, crowd, annoyance) seen in Luke 6:18; Heb 12:15, and means to cause trouble beside (para) one or in a matter. This is the general point of James which he explains further concerning "those who are turning from the Gentiles unto God," the very kind of people referred to in Amos.

Verse 20

But that we write unto them (alla episteilai autois). By way of contrast (alla). First aorist active infinitive of epistellô, old verb to send to one (message, letter, etc.). Our word epistle (epistolê as in verse Acts 15:30) comes from this verb. In the N.T. only here, Heb 13:22, and possibly Acts 21:25. That they abstain from (tou apechesthai). The genitive of the articular infinitive of purpose, present middle (direct) of apechô, old verb, to hold oneself back from. The best old MSS. do not have apo, but the ablative is clear enough in what follows. James agrees with Peter in his support of Paul and Barnabas in their contention for Gentile freedom from the Mosaic ceremonial law. The restrictions named by James affect the moral code that applies to all (idolatry, fornication, murder). Idolatry, fornication and murder were the outstanding sins of paganism then and now (Rev 22:15). Harnack argues ably against the genuineness of the word pniktou (strangled) which is absent from D Irenaeus, Tertullian, Cyprian. It is a nice point, though the best MSS. have it in accord with Lev 17:10-16. The problem is whether the words were added because "blood" was understood as not "murder," but a reference to the Mosaic regulation or whether it was omitted to remove the ceremonial aspect and make it all moral and ethical. The Western text omits the word also in verse Acts 15:29. But with the word retained here and in verse Acts 15:29 the solution of James is not a compromise, though there is a wise concession to Jewish feeling. Pollutions of idols (aligêmatôn). From alisseô only in the LXX and this substantive nowhere else.

The word refers to idolatrous practices (pollutions) and things sacrificed to idols (eidôluthôn) in verse Acts 15:29, not to sacrificial meat sold in the market (1Co 10:27), a matter not referred to here. Cf. Lev 17:1-9. All the four items in the position of James (accepting pniktou) are mentioned in Lev 17:1-18:30.

Verse 21

For Moses (Môusês gar). A reason why these four necessary things (verse Acts 15:28) are named. In every city are synagogues where rabbis proclaim (kêrussontas) these matters. Hence the Gentile Christians would be giving constant offence to neglect them. The only point where modern Christian sentiment would object would be about "things strangled" and "blood" in the sense of any blood left in the animals, though most Christians probably agree with the feeling of James in objecting to blood in the food. If "blood" is taken to be "murder," that difficulty vanishes. Moses will suffer no loss for these Gentile Christians are not adherents of Judaism.

Verse 22

Then it seemed good (Tote edoxen). First aorist active indicative of dokeô. A regular idiom at the beginning of decrees. This Eirenicon of James commended itself to the whole assembly. Apparently a vote was taken which was unanimous, the Judaizers probably not voting. The apostles and the elders (tois apostolois kai tois presbuterois, article with each, dative case) probably all vocally expressed their position. With the whole church (sun holei têi ekklêsiâi). Probably by acclamation. It was a great victory. But James was a practical leader and he did not stop with speeches and a vote. To choose men out of their company (eklezamenous andras ex autôn). Accusative case, though dative just before (tois apostolois, etc.), of first aorist middle participle of eklegô, to select. This loose case agreement appears also in grapsantes in verse Acts 15:23 and in MSS. in verse Acts 15:25. It is a common thing in all Greek writers (Paul, for instance), especially in the papyri and in the Apocalypse of John. Judas called Barsabbas (Ioudan ton kaloumenon Barsabban). Not otherwise known unless he is a brother of Joseph Barsabbas of Acts 1:23, an early follower of Jesus. The other, Silas, is probably a shortened form of Silvanus (Silouanos, 1Pe 5:12), the companion of Paul in his second mission tour (Acts 15:32, 41; Acts 16:25). Chief men (hêgoumenous). Leaders, leading men (participle from hêgeomai, to lead).

Verse 23

And they wrote (grapsantes). First aorist active participle of graphô and the nominative as if a principal verb epempsan had been used instead of pempsai, the first aorist active infinitive (anacoluthon). This committee of four (Judas, Silas, Barnabas, Paul) carried the letter which embodied the decision of the Conference. This letter is the writing out of the judgment of James and apparently written by him as the President. The apostles and the elders, brethren (hoi apostoloi kai hoi presbuteroi, adelphoi). So the oldest and best MSS. without kai (and) before "brethren." This punctuation is probably correct and not "elder brethren." The inquiry had been sent to the apostles and elders (verse Acts 15:2) though the whole church joined in the welcome (verse Acts 15:4) and in the decision (verse Acts 15:22). The apostles and elders send the epistle, but call themselves "brothers to brothers," Fratres Fratibus Salutem. "The brothers" (tois adelphois) addressed (dative case) are of the Gentiles (ex ethnôn) and those in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, because they were immediately involved. But the decision of this Conference was meant for Gentile Christians everywhere (Acts 16:4). Greeting (Chairein). The customary formula in the beginning of letters, the absolute infinitive (usually chairein) with the nominative absolute also as in Jas 1:1; Acts 23:26 and innumerable papyri (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1902f.).

Verse 24

Certain which went from us (tines ex hêmôn, Aleph B omit exelthontes). A direct blow at the Judaizers, put in delicate language (we heard êkousamen) as if only at Antioch (Acts 15:1), and not also in Jerusalem in open meeting (Acts 15:5). Have troubled you with words (etaraxan humas logois). What a picture of turmoil in the church in Antioch, words, words, words. Aorist tense of the common verb tarassô, to agitate, to make the heart palpitate (John 14:1, 27) and instrumental case of logois. Subverting your souls (anaskeuazontes tas psuchas humôn). Present active participle of anaskeuazô, old verb (ana and skeuos, baggage) to pack up baggage, to plunder, to ravage. Powerful picture of the havoc wrought by the Judaizers among the simple-minded Greek Christians in Antioch. To whom we gave no commandment (hois ou diesteilametha). First aorist middle indicative of diastellô, old verb to draw asunder, to distinguish, to set forth distinctly, to command. This is a flat disclaimer of the whole conduct of the Judaizers in Antioch and in Jerusalem, a complete repudiation of their effort to impose the Mosaic ceremonial law upon the Gentile Christians.

Verse 25

It seemed good unto us (edoxen hêmin). See statement by Luke in verse Acts 15:22, and now this definite decision is in the epistle itself. It is repeated in verse Acts 15:28. Having come to one accord (genomenois homothumadon). On this adverb, common in Acts, see on Acts 1:14. But genomenois clearly means that the final unity was the result of the Conference (private and public talks). The Judaizers are here brushed to one side as the defeated disturbers that they really were who had lacked the courage to vote against the majority. To choose out men and send them (eklexamenois andras pempasai A B L, though Aleph C D read eklexamenous as in verse Acts 15:22). Precisely the same idiom as in verse Acts 15:22, "having chosen out to send." With our beloved Barnabas and Paul (sun tois agapêtois hêmôn Barnabâi kai Paulôi). The verbal adjective agapêtois (common in the N.T.) definitely sets the seal of warm approval on Barnabas and Paul. Paul (Gal 2:9) confirms this by his statement concerning the right hand of fellowship given.

Verse 26

Have hazarded their lives (paradedôkosi tas psuchas autôn). Perfect active participle dative plural of paradidômi, old word, to hand over to another, and with psuchas, to hand over to another their lives. The sufferings of Paul and Barnabas in Pisidia and Lycaonia were plainly well-known just as the story of Judson in Burmah is today. On the use of "name" here see on Acts 3:6.

Verse 27

Who themselves also shall tell you the same things by word of mouth (kai autous dia logou apaggellontas ta auta). Literally, "they themselves also by speech announcing the same things." The present participle, as here, sometimes is used like the future to express purpose as in Acts 3:26 eulogounta after apesteilen and so here apaggellontas after apestalkamen (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1128). Judas and Silas are specifically endorsed (perfect active indicative of apostellô) as bearers of the epistle who will also verbally confirm the contents of the letter.

Verse 28

To the Holy Spirit and to us (tôi pneumati tôn hagiôn kai hêmin). Dative case after edoxen (third example, verses Acts 15:22, 25, 28). Definite claim that the church in this action had the guidance of the Holy Spirit. That fact was plain to the church from what had taken place in Caesarea and in this campaign of Paul and Barnabas (verse Acts 15:8). Jesus had promised that the Holy Spirit would guide them into all truth (John 16:13). Even so the church deliberated carefully before deciding. What a blessing it would be if this were always true! But even so the Judaizers are only silenced for the present, not convinced and only waiting for a better day to start over again. No greater burden (mêden pleon baros). The restrictions named did constitute some burden (cf. Mat 20:12), for the old word baros means weight or heaviness. Morality itself is a restraint upon one's impulses as is all law a prohibition against license.

Verse 29

Than these necessary things (plên toutôn tôn epanagkes). This old adverb (from epi and anagkê) means on compulsion, of necessity. Here only in the N.T. For discussion of these items see on verses Acts 15:20, 21. In comparison with the freedom won this "burden" is light and not to be regarded as a compromise in spite of the arguments of Lightfoot and Ramsay. It was such a concession as any converted Gentile would be glad to make even if "things strangled" be included. This "necessity" was not a matter of salvation but only for fellowship between Jews and Gentiles. The Judaizers made the law of Moses essential to salvation (Acts 15:16). It shall be well with you (eu praxete). Ye shall fare well. A classical idiom used here effectively. The peace and concord in the fellowship of Jews and Gentiles will justify any slight concession on the part of the Gentiles. This letter is not laid down as a law, but it is the judgment of the Jerusalem Christians for the guidance of the Gentiles (Acts 16:4) and it had a fine effect at once (Acts 15:30-35). Trouble did come later from the Judaizers who were really hostile to the agreement in Jerusalem, but that opposition in no way discredits the worth of the work of this Conference. No sane agreement will silence perpetual and professional disturbers like these Judaizers who will seek to unsettle Paul's work in Antioch, in Corinth, in Galatia, in Jerusalem, in Rome. Fare ye well (Errôsthe). Valete. Perfect passive imperative of rhônnumi, to make strong. Common at the close of letters. Be made strong, keep well, fare well. Here alone in the N.T. though some MSS. have it in Acts 23:30.

Verse 30

So they (hoi men oun). As in verse Acts 15:3. When they were dismissed (apoluthentes). First aorist passive participle of apoluô, common verb to loosen, to dismiss. Possibly (Hackett) religious services were held as in verse Acts 15:33 (cf. Acts 13:3) and perhaps an escort for part of the way as in verse Acts 15:3. The multitude (to plêthos). Public meeting of the church as in verses Acts 15:1-3. Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 232) gives illustrations from the inscriptions of the use of plêthos for official, political, and religious gatherings. The committee formally "delivered" (epedôkan) the epistle to the church authorities.

Verse 31

When they had read it (anagnontes). Second aorist active participle of anaginôskô. Public reading, of course, to the church. They rejoiced (echarêsan). Second aorist (ingressive) passive indicative of chairô. They burst into exultant joy showing clearly that they did not consider it a weak compromise, but a glorious victory of Gentile liberty. For the consolation (epi têi paraklêsei). The encouragement, the cheer in the letter. See parekalesan in verse Acts 15:32. Consolation and exhortation run into one another in this word.

Verse 32

Being themselves also prophets (kai autoi prophêtai ontes). As well as Paul and Barnabas and like Agabus (Acts 11:27-30), for-speakers for Christ who justify the commendation in the letter (verse Acts 15:27) "with many words" (dia logou pollou), "with much talk," and no doubt with kindly words concerning the part played at the Conference by Paul and Barnabas. Confirmed (epestêrixan). See on Acts 14:22. It was a glorious time with no Judaizers to disturb their fellowship as in Acts 15:1-3.

Verse 33

Some time (chronon). Accusative after poiêsantes, "having done time." How long we do not know.

Verse 34

But it seemed good unto Silas to abide there (edoxe de Silâi epimeinai autou). This verse is not in the Revised Version or in the text of Westcott and Hort, being absent from Aleph A B Vulgate, etc. It is clearly an addition to help explain the fact that Silas is back in Antioch in verse Acts 15:40. But the "some days" of verse Acts 15:36 afforded abundant time for him to return from Jerusalem. He and Judas went first to Jerusalem to make a report of their mission.

Verse 35

Tarried (dietribon). Imperfect active of diatribô, old verb to pass time, seen already in Acts 12:19; Acts 14:3, 28. With many others also (meta kai heterôn pollôn). A time of general revival and naturally so after the victory at Jerusalem. It is at this point that it is probable that the sad incident took place told by Paul in Gal 2:11-21. Peter came up to see how things were going in Antioch after Paul's victory in Jerusalem. At first Peter mingled freely with the Greek Christians without the compunctions shown at Caesarea and for which he had to answer in Jerusalem (Acts 11:1-18). Rumours of Peter's conduct reached Jerusalem and the Judaizers saw a chance to reopen the controversy on the line of social customs, a matter not passed on at the Jerusalem Conference. These Judaizers threaten Peter with a new trial and he surrenders and is followed by Barnabas and all the Jewish brethren in Antioch to the dismay of Paul who boldly rebuked Peter and Barnabas and won them back to his view. It was a crisis. Some would even date the Epistle to the Galatians at this time also, an unlikely hypothesis.

Verse 36

Let us return now and visit the brethren (epistrepsantes de episkepsômetha tous adelphous). Paul takes the initiative as the leader, all the more so if the rebuke to Peter and Barnabas in Gal 2:11-21 had already taken place. Paul is anxious, like a true missionary, to go back to the fields where he has planted the gospel. He uses the hortatory subjunctive (episkepsômetha) for the proposal (see on Acts 15:14 for this verb). Note the repeated epi (epistrepsantes and episkepsômetha). There is special point in the use of dê (shortened form of êdê), now at this juncture of affairs (cf. Acts 13:2). How they fare (pôs echousin). Indirect question, "how they have it." The precariousness of the life of new converts in pagan lands is shown in all of Paul's Epistles (Furneaux). So he wanted to go city by city (kata polin pâsan).

Verse 37

Was minded to take with them (ebouleto sunparalabein). Imperfect middle (ebouleto), not aorist middle ebouleusato of the Textus Receptus. Barnabas willed, wished and stuck to it (imperfect tense). Sunparalabein is second aorist active infinitive of the double compound sunparalambanô, old verb to take along together with, used already about John Mark in Acts 12:25 and by Paul in Gal 2:1 about Titus. Nowhere else in the N.T. Barnabas used the ingressive aorist in his suggestion.

Verse 38

But Paul thought not good to take with them (Paulos de êxiou--mê sunparalambanein touton). The Greek is far more effective than this English rendering. It is the imperfect active of axioô, old verb to think meet or right and the present active infinitive of the same verb (sunparalambanô) with negative used with this infinitive. Literally, "But Paul kept on deeming it wise not to be taking along with them this one." Barnabas looked on it as a simple punctiliar proposal (aorist infinitive), but Paul felt a lively realization of the problem of having a quitter on his hands (present infinitive). Each was insistent in his position (two imperfects). Paul had a definite reason for his view describing John Mark as "him who withdrew from them from Pamphylia" (ton apostanta ap' autôn apo Pamphulias). Second aorist active articular participle of aphistêmi, intransitive use, "the one who stood off from, apostatized from" (our very word "apostasy"). And also as the one who "went not with them to the work" (kai mê sunelthonta autois eis to ergon). At Perga Mark had faced the same task that Paul and Barnabas did, but he flinched and flickered and quit. Paul declined to repeat the experiment with Mark.

Verse 39

A sharp contention (paroxusmos). Our very word paroxysm in English. Old word though only twice in the N.T. (here and Heb 10:24), from paroxunô, to sharpen (para, oxus) as of a blade and of the spirit (Acts 17:16; 1Co 13:5). This "son of consolation" loses his temper in a dispute over his cousin and Paul uses sharp words towards his benefactor and friend. It is often so that the little irritations of life give occasion to violent explosions. If the incident in Gal 2:11-21 had already taken place, there was a sore place already that could be easily rubbed. And if Mark also joined with Peter and Barnabas on that occasion, Paul had fresh ground for irritation about him. But there is no way to settle differences about men and we can only agree to disagree as Paul and Barnabas did. So that they parted asunder from one another (hôte apochôristhênai autous ap' allêlôn). Actual result here stated by hôte and the first aorist passive infinitive of apochôrizô, old verb to sever, to separate, here only and Rev 6:4 in the N.T. The accusative of general reference (autous) is normal. For construction with hôte see Robertson, Grammar, pp. 999f. And Barnabas took Mark with him and sailed away to Cyprus (ton te Barnaban paralabonta ton Markon ekpleusai eis Kupron). Second infinitival clause ekpleusai after hôte connected by te. The same participle is used here minus sun, paralabonta (second aorist active). Barnabas and Mark sailed out (ekpleusai from ekpleô) from the harbour of Antioch. This is the last glimpse that Luke gives us of Barnabas, one of the noblest figures in the New Testament. Paul has a kindly reference to him in 1Co 9:6. No one can rightly blame Barnabas for giving his cousin John Mark a second chance nor Paul for fearing to risk him again. One's judgment may go with Paul, but one's heart goes with Barnabas. And Mark made good with Barnabas, with Peter (1Pe 5:13) and finally with Paul (Col 4:10; 2Ti 4:11). See my little book on John Mark (Making Good in the Ministry). Paul and Barnabas parted in anger and both in sorrow. Paul owed more to Barnabas than to any other man. Barnabas was leaving the greatest spirit of the time and of all times.

Verse 40

Chose (epilexamenos). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of epilegô, choosing for himself, as the successor of Barnabas, not of Mark who had no place in Paul's plans at this time. Commended (paradotheis). First aorist passive of paradidômi, the same verb employed about Paul and Barnabas (Acts 14:26) on their return from the first tour. It is clear now that the sympathy of the church at Antioch is with Paul rather than with Barnabas in the cleavage that has come. The church probably recalled how in the pinch Barnabas flickered and went to the side of Peter and that it was Paul who for the moment stood Paulus contra mundum for Gentile liberty in Christ against the threat of the Judaizers from Jerusalem. Silas had influence in the church in Jerusalem (verse Acts 15:22) and was apparently a Roman citizen (Acts 16:37) also. He is the Silas or Silvanus of the epistles (1Th 1:1; 2Th 1:1; 2Co 1:19; 1Pe 5:12). It is remarkable that Peter mentions both Mark and Silas as with him (1Pe 5:12) at the same time.

Verse 41

Went through (diêrcheto). Imperfect middle. So Paul went forth on his second mission tour with heart-aches and high hopes mingled together. Syria and Cilicia (tên Surian kai tên Kilikian). He took the opposite course from the first tour, leaving Cyprus to Barnabas and Mark. Probably Paul had established these churches while in Tarsus after leaving Jerusalem (Acts 9:30; Gal 1:21). Paul would go "by the Gulf of Issus through the Syrian Gates, a narrow road between steep rocks and the sea, and then inland, probably past Tarsus and over Mt. Taurus by the Cilician gates" (Page). This second tour will occupy Luke's story in Acts through Acts 18:22.

Verse 1

And he came also to Derbe and Lystra (katêntêsen de kai eis Derbên kai eis Lustran). First aorist active of katantaô, late verb to come down to, to arrive at. He struck Derbe first of the places in the first tour which was the last city reached then. Timothy (Timotheos). Apparently a native of Lystra ("there," ekei), his Hebrew mother named Eunice and grandmother Lois (2Ti 1:5) and his Greek father's name not known. He may have been a proselyte, but not necessarily so as Timothy was taught the Scriptures by his mother and grandmother (2Ti 3:15), and, if a proselyte, he would have had Timothy circumcised. It is idle to ask if Paul came on purpose to get Timothy to take Mark's place. Probably Timothy was about eighteen years of age, a convert of Paul's former visit a few years before (1Ti 1:2) and still young twelve years later (1Ti 4:12). Paul loved him devotedly (1Ti 1:3; 1Ti 5:23; 2Ti 3:15; Php 2:19). It is a glorious discovery to find a real young preacher for Christ's work.

Verse 2

Was well reported of (emartureito). Imperfect passive. It was a continuous witness that was borne the young disciple both in his home town of Lystra and in Derbe. Already he had so borne himself that his gifts and graces for the ministry were recognized. It is a wise precaution that the approval of the local church is necessary for the licensing and the ordaining of a preacher. If God has called a man for the work signs of it will be manifest to others.

Him would Paul have to go forth with him (touton êthelêsen ho Paulos sun autôi exelthein). This one (note emphatic position) Paul wanted (first aorist active indicative of thelô with temporal augment as if from ethelô the old form). Here was a gifted young man who was both Jew and Greek. He took and circumcised him (labôn perietemen auton). Any one could perform this rite. Paul had stoutly resisted circumcision in the case of Titus, a pure Greek (Gal 2:3, 5), because the whole principle of Gentile liberty was at stake. But Timothy was both Jew and Greek and would continually give offence to the Jews with no advantage to the cause of Gentile freedom. So here for the sake of expediency, "because of the Jews" (dia tous Ioudaious), Paul voluntarily removed this stumbling-block to the ministry of Timothy. Otherwise Timothy could not have been allowed to preach in the synagogues. Idem non est semper idem. But Timothy's case was not the case of Titus. Here it was a question of efficient service, not an essential of salvation. Hovey notes that Timothy was circumcised because of Jewish unbelievers, not because of Jewish believers. Was a Greek (Hellên hupêrchen). Imperfect active in indirect assertion where ordinarily the present huparchei would be retained, possibly indicating that his father was no longer living.

Verse 4

They delivered them (paredidosan autois). Imperfect active, kept on delivering to them in city after city. This is a proof of Paul's loyalty to the Jerusalem compact (Knowling). The circumcision of Timothy would indicate also that the points involved were under discussion and that Paul felt no inconsistency in what he did. The decrees (ta dogmata). Old word from dokeô, to give an opinion. It is used of public decrees of rulers (Luke 2:1; Acts 17:7), of the requirements of the Mosaic law (Col 2:14), and here of the regulations or conclusions of the Jerusalem Conference. Silas was with Paul and his presence gave added dignity to the passing out of the decrees, a charter of Gentile freedom, since he was one of the committee from Jerusalem to Antioch (Acts 15:22, 27, 32). Which had been ordained (ta kekrimena). Perfect passive articular participle of krinô, to judge, emphasizing the permanence of the conclusions reached by the apostles and elders in Jerusalem. For to keep (phulassein). This present active infinitive likewise accents that it is a charter of liberty for continual living, not a temporary compromise.

Verse 5

Were strengthened (estereounto). Imperfect passive of stereoô, old verb to make firm and solid like the muscles (Acts 3:7, 16), these three the only examples in the N.T. Increased (eperisseuon). Imperfect active of the old and common verb perisseuô from perissos (overplus). The blessing of God was on the work of Paul, Silas, and Timothy in the form of a continuous revival.

Verse 6

The region of Phrygia and Galatia (tên Phrugian kai Galatikên chôran). This is probably the correct text with one article and apparently describes one "Region" or District in The Province of Galatia which was also Phrygian (the old-ethnographic name with which compare the use of Lycaonia in Acts 14:6). Strictly speaking Derbe and Lystra, though in the Province of Galatia, were not Phrygian, and so Luke would here be not resumptive of the record in verses Acts 16:1-5; but a reference to the country around Iconium and Antioch in Pisidia in North Galatia is not included. This verse is hotly disputed at every point by the advocates of the North Galatian theory as represented by Chase and the South Galatian theory by Ramsay. Whatever is true in regard to the language of Luke here and in Acts 18:23, it is still possible for Paul in Gal 1:2 to use the term Galatia of the whole province of that name which could, in fact, apply to either South or North Galatia or to both. He could, of course, use it also in the ethnographic sense of the real Gauls or Celts who dwelt in North Galatia. Certainly the first tour of Paul and Barnabas was in the Province of Galatia though touching only the Regions of Pisidia, Phrygia, and Lycaonia, which province included besides the Gauls to the north. In this second tour Lycaonia has been already touched (Derbe and Lystra) and now Phrygia. The question arises why Luke here and in Acts 18:23 adds the term "of Galatia" (Galatikên) though not in Acts 13:14 (Pisidian Antioch) nor in Acts 14:6 (cities of Lycaonia). Does Luke mean to use "of Galatia" in the same ethnographic sense as "of Phrygia" or does he here add the province (Galatia) to the name of the Region (Phrygia)? In itself either view is possible and it really matters very little except that the question is raised whether Paul went into the North Galatian Region on this occasion or later (Acts 18:23). He could have done so and the Epistle be addressed to the churches of South Galatia, North Galatia, or the province as a whole. But the Greek participle kôluthentes ("having been forbidden") plays a part in the argument that cannot be overlooked whether Luke means to say that Paul went north or not. This aorist passive participle of kôluô, to hinder, can only express simultaneous or antecedent action, not subsequent action as Ramsay argues. No example of the so-called subsequent use of the aorist participle has ever been found in Greek as all Greek grammarians agree (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 860-63, 1112-14). The only natural meaning of kôluthentes is that Paul with Silas and Timothy "passed through the region of Phrygia and Galatia" because they were hindered by the Holy Spirit from speaking the word in Asia (the Province of Asia of which Ephesus was the chief city and west of Derbe and Lystra). This construction implies that the country called "the region of Phrygia and Galatia" is not in the direct line west toward Ephesus. What follows in verse Acts 16:7 throws further light on the point.

Verse 7

Over against Mysia (kata tēn Musian). This was an ill-defined region rather north and west of Phrygia. The Romans finally absorbed most of it in the Province of Asia. They assayed to go into Bithynia (epeirazon eis tēn Bithunian poreuthēnai). Conative imperfect of peirazô and ingressive aorist passive infinitive of poreuomai. Now Bithynia is northeast of Mysia and north of Galatia (province). Clearly Luke means to say that Paul had, when hindered by the Holy Spirit from going west into Asia, gone north so as to come in front of Bithynia. This journey would take him directly through Phrygia and the North Galatian country (the real Gauls or Celts). This is, to my mind, the strongest argument for the North Galatian view in these verses Acts 16:6, 7. The grammar and the topography bring Paul right up to Bithynia (north of the old Galatia). It is verses Acts 16:6, 7 that make me pause before accepting the plausible arguments of Ramsay for the South Galatian theory. In itself the problem is nothing like so important or so determinative as he makes it. But shall we smash Luke's grammar to pieces to bolster up a theory of criticism? And the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not (kai ouk eiasen autous to pneuma Iêsou). The same Spirit who in verse Acts 16:6 had forbidden going into Asia now closed the door into Bithynia. This expression occurs nowhere else, but we have the spirit of Christ (Rom 8:9) and the Spirit of Jesus Christ (Php 1:19). Eiasen is first aorist active indicative of eaô, old verb to allow.

Verse 8

Passing by Mysia (parelthontes tèn Musian). Literally, passing alongside or skirting Mysia, neglecting it without preaching there. Strictly they passed through part of it to reach Troas. To Troas (eis Troiada). This city, named Alexandria Troas after Alexander the Great, was the seaport of Mysia, though a Roman colony and not counted as part of either Asia or Bithynia. New Ilium, on the site of the old Troy, was four miles farther north. It was the place to take ship for Philippi. Twice again Paul will be here (2Co 2:12; Acts 20:6).

Verse 9

A vision (horama). Old word, eleven times in Acts, once in Mat 17:9. Twice Paul had been hindered by the Holy Spirit from going where he wanted to go. Most men would have gone back home with such rebuffs, but not so Paul. Now the call is positive and not negative, to go "far hence to the Gentiles" (Acts 22:21). He had little dreamed of such a call when he left Antioch. Paul's frequent visions always came at real crises in his life. A man of Macedonia (anêr Makedôn). Ramsay follows Renan in the view that this was Luke with whom Paul had conversed about conditions in Macedonia. Verse Acts 16:10 makes it plain that Luke was now in the party, but when he joined them we do not know. Some hold that Luke lived at Antioch in Syria and came on with Paul and Silas, others that he joined them later in Galatia, others that he appeared now either as Paul's physician or new convert. Ramsay thinks that Philippi was his home at this time. But, whatever is true about Luke, the narrative must not be robbed of its supernatural aspect (Acts 10:10; Acts 22:17). Was standing (ên hestôs). Second perfect active participle of histêmi, intransitive, periphrastic imperfect. Vivid picture. Help us (boêthêson hêmin). Ingressive first aorist active imperative of boêtheô (boê, theô), to run at a cry, to help. The man uses the plural for all including himself. It was the cry of Europe for Christ.

Verse 10

We sought (ezêtêsamen). This sudden use of the plural, dropped in Acts 17:1 when Paul leaves Philippi, and resumed in Acts 20:5 when Paul rejoins Luke in Philippi, argues conclusively that Luke, the author, is in the party ("we" portions of Acts) and shows in a writer of such literary skill as Luke that he is not copying a document in a blundering sort of way. Paul told his vision to the party and they were all ready to respond to the call. Concluding (sunbibazontes). A very striking word, present active participle of sunbibazô, old verb to make go together, to coalesce or knit together, to make this and that agree and so to conclude. Already in Acts 9:22 of Paul's preaching. This word here gives a good illustration of the proper use of the reason in connection with revelation, to decide whether it is a revelation from God, to find out what it means for us, and to see that we obey the revelation when understood. God had called them to preach to the Macedonians. They had to go.

Verse 11

Setting sail (anachthentes). Same word in Acts 13:13 which see. We made a straight course (euthudromêsamen). First aorist active indicative of compound verb euthudromeô (in Philo) from adjective euthudromos (in Strabo), running a straight course (euthus, dromos). In the N.T. only here and Acts 21:1. It is a nautical term for sailing before the wind. Luke has a true feeling for the sea. To Samothrace (eis Samothrâikên). A small island in the Aegean about halfway between Troas and Neapolis. The day following (têi epiousêi). Locative case of time with hêmerâi (day) to be supplied (Acts 7:26; Acts 20:15; Acts 21:18; Acts 23:11). With adverse winds it took five days to make the run of 125 miles (Acts 20:6). To Neapolis (eis Nean Polin). To New Town (Newton, Naples, Neapolis). The port of Philippi ten miles distant, Thracian, but reckoned as Macedonian after Vespasian.

Verse 12

To Philippi (eis Philippous). The plural like Athênai (Athens) is probably due to separate sections of the city united (Winer-Moulton, Grammar, p. 220). The city (ancient name Krenides or Wells) was renamed after himself by Philip, the father of Alexander the Great. It was situated about a mile east of the small stream Gangites which flows into the river Strymon some thirty miles away. In this valley the Battle of Philippi was fought B.C. 42 between the Second Triumvirate (Octavius, Antonius, Lepidus) and Brutus and Cassius. In memory of the victory Octavius made it a colony (kolônia) with all the privileges of Roman citizenship, such as freedom from scourging, freedom from arrest save in extreme cases, and the right of appeal to the emperor. This Latin word occurs here alone in the N.T. Octavius planted here a colony of Roman veterans with farms attached, a military outpost and a miniature of Rome itself. The language was Latin. Here Paul is face to face with the Roman power and empire in a new sense. He was a new Alexander, come from Asia to conquer Europe for Christ, a new Caesar to build the Kingdom of Christ on the work of Alexander and Caesar. One need not think that Paul was conscious of all that was involved in destiny for the world. Philippi was on the Egnatian Way, one of the great Roman roads, that ran from here to Dyrrachium on the shores of the Adriatic, a road that linked the east with the west. The first of the district (prôtê tês meridos). Philippi was not the first city of Macedonia nor does Luke say so. That honour belonged to Thessalonica and even Amphipolis was larger than Philippi. It is not clear whether by meris Luke means a formal division of the province, though the Koin, has examples of this geographical sense (papyri). There is no article with prôtê and Luke may not mean to stress unduly the position of Philippi in comparison with Amphipolis. But it was certainly a leading city of this district of Macedonia. We were tarrying (êmen diatribontes). Periphrastic imperfect active.

Verse 13

By a river side (para potamon). The little river Gangites (or Gargites) was one mile west of the town. Philippi as a military outpost had few Jews. There was evidently no synagogue inside the city, but "without the gates" (exô tês pulês) they had noticed an enclosure "where we supposed" (hou enomizomen, correct text, imperfect active), probably as they came into the city, "was a place of prayer" (proscuchên einai). Infinitive with accusative of general reference in indirect discourse. Proseuchê is common in the LXX and the N.T. for the act of prayer as in Acts 2:42 then for a place of prayer either a synagogue (III Macc. 7:20) or more often an open air enclosure near the sea or a river where there was water for ceremonial ablutions. The word occurs also in heathen writers for a place of prayer (Schurer, Jewish People, Div. II, Vol. II, p. 69, Engl. Tr.). Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 222) quotes an Egyptian inscription of the third century B.C. with this sense of the word and one from Panticapaeum on the Black Sea of the first century A.D. (Light from the Ancient East, p. 102). Juvenal (III. 296) has a sneering reference to the Jewish proseucha. Josephus (Ant. XIV. 10, 23) quotes a decree of Halicarnassus which allowed the Jews "to make their prayers (proseuchas) on the seashore according to the custom of their fathers." There was a synagogue in Thessalonica, but apparently none in Amphipolis and Apollonia (Acts 17:1). The rule of the rabbis required ten men to constitute a synagogue, but here were gathered only a group of women at the hour of prayer. In pioneer days in this country it was a common thing to preach under bush arbours in the open air. John Wesley and George Whitfield were great open air preachers. Paul did not have an inspiring beginning for his work in Europe, but he took hold where he could. The conjecture was correct. It was a place of prayer, but only a bunch of women had come together (tais sunelthousais gunaixin), excuse enough for not preaching to some preachers, but not to Paul and his party. The "man of Macedonia" turned out to be a group of women (Furneaux). Macedonian inscriptions show greater freedom for women in Macedonia than elsewhere at this time and confirm Luke's story of the activities of women in Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea. We sat down and spake (kathisantes elaloumen). Having taken our seats (aorist active participle of kathizô) we began to speak or preach (inchoative imperfect of laleô, often used for preaching). Sitting was the Jewish attitude for public speaking. It was not mere conversation, but more likely conversational preaching of an historical and expository character. Luke's use of the first person plural implies that each of the four (Paul, Silas, Timothy, Luke) preached in turn, with Paul as chief speaker.

Verse 14

Lydia (Ludia). Her birthplace was Thyatira in Lydia. She may have been named after the land, though Lydia is a common female name (see Horace). Lydia was itself a Macedonian colony (Strabo, XIII. 4). Thyatira (note plural form like Philippi and one of the seven churches of Asia here Rev 2:18) was famous for its purple dyes as old as Homer (Iliad, IV. 141) and had a guild of dyers (hoi bapheis) as inscriptions show. A seller of purple (porphuropôlis). A female seller of purple fabrics (porphura, pôlis). Late word, masculine form in an inscription. There was a great demand for this fabric as it was used on the official toga at Rome and in Roman colonies. We still use the term "royal purple." See on Luke 16:19. Evidently Lydia was a woman of some means to carry on such an important enterprise from her native city. She may have been a freed-woman, since racial names were often borne by slaves. One that worshipped God (sebomenê ton theon). A God-fearer or proselyte of the gate. There was a Jewish settlement in Thyatira which was especially interested in the dyeing industry. She probably became a proselyte there. Whether this was true of the other women we do not know. They may have been Jewesses or proselytes like Lydia, probably all of them employees of hers in her business. When Paul writes to the Philippians he does not mention Lydia who may have died meanwhile and who certainly was not Paul's wife. She was wealthy and probably a widow. Heard us (êkouen). Imperfect active of akouô, was listening, really listening and she kept it up, listening to each of these new and strange preachers. Opened (diênoixen). First aorist active indicative of dianoigô, old word, double compound (dia, ana, oigô) to open up wide or completely like a folding door (both sides, dia, two). Only the Lord could do that. Jesus had opened (the same verb) the mind of the disciples to understand the Scriptures (Luke 24:45). To give heed (prosechein). To hold the mind (ton noun understood), present active infinitive. She kept her mind centred on the things spoken by Paul whose words gripped her attention. She rightly perceived that Paul was the foremost one of the group. He had personal magnetism and power of intellect that the Spirit of God used to win the heart of this remarkable woman to Christ. It was worth coming to Philippi to win this fine personality to the Kingdom of God. She will be the chief spirit in this church that will give Paul more joy and co-operation than any of his churches. It is not stated that she was converted on the first Sabbath, though this may have been the case. "One solitary convert, a woman, and she already a seeker after God, and a native of that very Asia where they had been forbidden to preach" (Furneaux). But a new era had dawned for Europe and for women in the conversion of Lydia.

Verse 15

And when she was baptized (hôs de ebaptisthê). First aorist passive indicative of baptizô. The river Gangites was handy for the ordinance and she had now been converted and was ready to make this public declaration of her faith in Jesus Christ. And her household (kai ho oikos autês). Who constituted her "household"? The term oikos, originally means the building as below, "into my house" and then it includes the inmates of a house. There is nothing here to show whether Lydia's "household" went beyond "the women" employed by her who like her had heard the preaching of Paul and had believed. "Possibly Euodia and Syntyche and the other women, Php 4:2, 3, may have been included in the family of Lydia, who may have employed many slaves and freed women in her trade" (Knowling). "This statement cannot be claimed as any argument for infant baptism, since the Greek word may mean her servants or her work-people" (Furneaux). In the household baptisms (Cornelius, Lydia, the jailor, Crispus) one sees "infants" or not according to his predilections or preferences. If ye have judged me (ei kekrikate me). Condition of the first class, assumed to be true (ei and the indicative, here perfect active of krinô). She had confessed her faith and submitted to baptism as proof that she was "faithful to the Lord" (pistên tôi kuriôi), believing on the Lord. "If she was fit for that, surely she was fit to be their hostess" (Furneaux). And Paul and his party had clearly no comfortable place to stay while in Philippi. The ancient hotels or inns were abominable. Evidently Paul demurred for there were four of them and he did not wish to sacrifice his independence or be a burden even to a woman of wealth. And she constrained us (kai parebiasato hēmas). Effective first aorist middle of parabiazomai, late word, in the N.T. only here and Luke 24:29. Some moral force (bia) or hospitable persuasion was required (cf. 1Sa 28:23), but Lydia had her way as women usually do. So he accepted Lydia's hospitality in Philippi, though he worked for his own living in Thessalonica (2Th 3:8) and elsewhere (2Co 11:9). So far only women have been won to Christ in Philippi. The use of "us" shows that Luke was not a householder in Philippi.

Verse 16

A spirit of divination (pneuma puthōna). So the correct text with accusative (apparition, a spirit, a python), not the genitive (puthōnos). Hesychius defines it as daimonion manikon (a spirit of divination). The etymology of the word is unknown. Bengel suggests puthesthai from punthanomai, to inquire. Python was the name given to the serpent that kept guard at Delphi, slain by Apollo, who was called Puthios Apollo and the prophetess at Delphi was termed Pythia. Certainly Luke does not mean to credit Apollo with a real existence (1Co 8:4). But Plutarch (A.D. 50-100) says that the term puthōnes was applied to ventriloquists (eggastrimuthoi). In the LXX those with familiar spirits are called by this word ventriloquists (Lev 19:31; Lev 20:6, 27, including the witch of Endor 1Sa 28:7). It is possible that this slave girl had this gift of prophecy "by soothsaying" (manteuomenē). Present middle participle of manteuomai, old heathen word (in contrast with prophēteuō) for acting the seer (mantis) and this kin to mainomai, to be mad, like the howling dervishes of later times. This is the so-called instrumental use of the circumstantial participles. Brought (pareichen). Imperfect active of parechō, a steady source of income. Much gain (ergasian pollēn). Work, business, from ergazomai, to work. Her masters (tois kuriois autēs). Dative case. Joint owners of this poor slave girl who were exploiting her calamity, whatever it was, for selfish gain, just as men and women today exploit girls and women in the "white slave" trade. As a fortune-teller she was a valuable asset for all the credulous dupes of the community. Simon Magus in Samaria and Elymas Barjesus in Cyprus had won power and wealth as soothsayers.

Verse 17

The Most High God (tou theou tou hupsistou). Pagan inscriptions use this language for the Supreme Being. It looks like supernatural testimony like that borne by the demoniacs to Jesus as "son of the Most High God" (Luke 8:28. Cf; also Mark 1:24; Mark 3:11; Mat 8:29; Luke 4:41, etc.). She may have heard Paul preach about Jesus as the way of salvation. The way of salvation (hodon sôtêrias). A way of salvation, strictly speaking (no article). There were many "ways of salvation" offered to men then as now.

Verse 18

She did (epoiei). Imperfect active, kept it up for many days. The strange conduct gave Paul and the rest an unpleasant prominence in the community. Being sore troubled (diaponêtheis). First aorist passive of diaponeô, old verb, to work laboriously, then in passive to be "worked up," displeased, worn out. In the N.T. only here and Acts 4:2 which see (there of the Sadducees about Peter's preaching). Paul was grieved, annoyed, indignant. He wanted no testimony from a source like this any more than he did the homage of the people of Lystra (Acts 14:14). That very hour (autêi têi hôrâi). Locative case of time and familiar Lukan idiom in his Gospel, "at the hour itself." The cure was instantaneous. Paul, like Jesus, distinguished between the demon and the individual.

Verse 19

Was gone (exêlthen). Was gone out of the slave girl, second aorist active indicative of exerchomai. "The two most important social revolutions worked by Christianity have been the elevation of woman and the abolition of slavery" (Furneaux). Both are illustrated here (Lydia and this slave girl). "The most sensitive part of 'civilized' man is the pocket" (Ramsay). Laid hold on (epilabomenoi). Second aorist middle participle of epilambanô as in Acts 9:27; Acts 17:19, but here with hostile intent. Dragged (heilkusân). First aorist active indicative of helkuô, late form of the old verb helkô (also in Jas 2:6) to draw as a sword, and then to drag one forcibly as here and Acts 21:30. It is also used of spiritual drawing as by Jesus in John 12:32. Here it is by violence. Into the marketplace (eis tèn agoran). Into the Roman forum near which would be the courts of law as in our courthouse square, as in Acts 17:17. Marketing went on also (Mark 7:4), when the crowds collect (Mark 6:56), from ageirô, to collect or gather. Unto the rulers (epi tous archontas). General Greek term for "the magistrates."

Verse 20

Unto the magistrates (tois stratêgois). Greek term (stratos, agô) for leader of an army or general. But in civic life a governor. The technical name for the magistrates in a Roman colony was duumviri or duumvirs, answering to consuls in Rome. Stratêgoi here is the Greek rendering of the Latin praetores (praetors), a term which they preferred out of pride to the term duumviri. Since they represented consuls, the praetors or duumvirs were accompanied by lictors bearing rods (verse Acts 16:35). These men (houtoi hoi anthrôpoi). Contemptuous use. Being Jews (Ioudaioi huparchontes). The people of Philippi, unlike those in Antioch (Acts 11:26), did not recognize any distinction between Jews and Christians. These four men were Jews. This appeal to race prejudice would be especially pertinent then because of the recent decree of Claudius expelling Jews from Rome (Acts 18:2). It was about A.D. 49 or 50 that Paul is in Philippi. The hatred of the Jews by the Romans is known otherwise (Cicero, Pro Flacco, XXVIII; Juvenal, XIV. 96-106). Do exceedingly trouble (ektarassousin). Late compound (effective use of ek in composition) and only here in the N.T.

Verse 21

Customs which it is not lawful for us to receive, or to observe, being Romans (ethê ha ouk estin hêmin paradechesthai oude poiein Rômaiois ousin). Note the sharp contrast between "being Jews" in verse Acts 16:20 and "being Romans" here. This pose of patriotism is all sound and fury. It is love of money that moves these "masters" far more than zeal for Rome. As Roman citizens in a colony they make full use of all their rights of protest. Judaism was a religio licita in the Roman empire, only they were not allowed to make proselytes of the Romans themselves. No Roman magistrate would pass on abstract theological questions (Acts 18:15), but only if a breach of the peace was made (ektarassousin hêmôn tên polin) or the formation of secret sects and organizations. Evidently both of these last points are involved by the charges of "unlawful customs" by the masters who are silent about their real ground of grievance against Paul and Silas. Ethos (kin to êthos, 1Co 15:33) is from ethô, to be accustomed or used to a thing. The Romans granted toleration to conquered nations to follow their religious customs provided they did not try to win the Romans. But the Jews had made great headway to favour (the God-fearers) with increasing hatred also. Emperor worship had in store grave peril for both Jews and Christians. The Romans will care more for this than for the old gods and goddesses. It will combine patriotism and piety.

Verse 22

Rose up together (sunepestê). Second aorist (ingressive) active of the double compound sunephistêmi, intransitive, old verb, but only here in the N.T. (cf. katepestêsan in Acts 18:12). There was no actual attack of the mob as Paul and Silas were in the hands of the officers, but a sudden and violent uprising of the people, the appeal to race and national prejudice having raised a ferment. Rent their garments off them (perirêxantes autôn ta himatia). First aorist active participle of perirêgnumi, old verb, to break off all around, to strip or rend all round. Here only in the N.T. The duumvirs probably gave orders for Paul and Silas to be stripped of their outer garments (himatia), though not actually doing it with their own hands, least of all not stripping off their own garments in horror as Ramsay thinks. That would call for the middle voice. In II Macc. 4:38 the active voice is used as here of stripping off the garments of others. Paul in 1Th 2:2 refers to the shameful treatment received in Philippi, "insulted" (hubristhentas). As a Roman citizen this was unlawful, but the duumvirs looked on Paul and Silas as vagabond and seditious Jews and "acted with the highhandedness characteristic of the fussy provincial authorities" (Knowling). Commanded (ekeleuon). Imperfect active, repeatedly ordered. The usual formula of command was: "Go, lictors; strip off their garments; let them be scourged." To beat them with rods (rhabdizein). Present active infinitive of rhabdizô, old verb, but in the N.T.=virgis caedere only here and 2Co 11:25 where Paul alludes to this incident and two others not given by Luke (tris erhabdisthên). He came near getting another in Jerusalem (Acts 22:25). Why did not Paul say here that he was a Roman citizen as he does later (verse Acts 16:37) and in Jerusalem (Acts 22:26)? It might have done no good in this hubbub and no opportunity was allowed for defence of any kind.

Verse 23

When they had laid (epithentes). Second aorist (constative) active participle of epitithêmi, to place upon. Many stripes (pollas plêgas). The Jewish law was forty stripes save one (2Co 11:24). The Roman custom depended on the caprice of the judge and was a terrible ordeal. It was the custom to inflict the stripes on the naked body (back) as Livy 2.5 says: "Missique lictores ad sumendum supplicium, nudatos virgis caedunt." On plêgas (from plêssô, to strike a blow) see on Luke 10:30; Luke 12:47. The jailor (tôi desmophulaki). Late word (desmos, phulax, keeper of bonds), in the N.T. only here (verses Acts 16:23, 27, 36). The LXX has the word archidesmophulax (Gen 39:21-23). Chrysostom calls this jailor Stephanus, he was of Achaia (1Co 16:15). To keep safely (asphalôs terein). Present active infinitive, to keep on keeping safely, perhaps "as dangerous political prisoners" (Rackham). He had some rank and was not a mere turnkey.

Into the inner prison (eis tèn esôteran phulakên). The comparative form from the adverb esô (within), Ionic and old Attic for eisô. In the LXX, but in the N.T. only here an (Heb 6:19). The Roman public prisons had a vestibule and outer prison and behind this the inner prison, a veritable dungeon with no light or air save what came through the door when open. One has only to picture modern cells in our jails, the dungeons in feudal castles, London prisons before the time of Howard, to appreciate the horrors of an inner prison cell in a Roman provincial town of the first century A.D. Made their feet fast (tous podas êsphalisato autôn). First aorist (effective) middle of asphalizô, from asphalês (safe), common verb in late Greek, in the N.T. only here an (Mat 27:64-66). The inner prison was safe enough without this refinement of cruelty. In the stocks (eis to xulon). Xulon, from xuô, to scrape or plane, is used for a piece of wood whether a cross or gibbet (Acts 5:30; Acts 10:39; Acts 13:29; Gal 3:13; 1Pe 2:24) or a log or timber with five holes (four for the wrists and ankles and one for the neck) or two for the feet as here, xulopedê, Latin vervulus, to shackle the feet stretched apart (Job 33:11). This torment was practiced in Sparta, Athens, Rome, and Adonirom Judson suffered it in Burmah. Xulon is also used in the N.T. for stick or staff (Mat 26:47) and even a tree (Luke 23:31). Tertullian said of Christians in the stocks: Nihil crus sentit in vervo, quum animus in caelo est (Nothing the limb feels in the stocks when the mind is in heaven).

Verse 25

About midnight (kata de mesonuktion). Middle of the night, old adjective seen already in Mark 13:35; Luke 11:5 which see. Were praying and singing (proseuchomenoi humnoun). Present middle participle and imperfect active indicative: Praying they were singing (simultaneously, blending together petition and praise). Humneô is an old verb from humnos (cf. Isa 12:4; Dan 3:23). Paul and Silas probably used portions of the Psalms (cf. Luke 1:39, 67; Luke 2:28) with occasional original outbursts of praise. Were listening to them (epêkroônto autôn). Imperfect middle of epakroaomai. Rare verb to listen with pleasure as to a recitation or music (Page). It was a new experience for the prisoners and wondrously attractive entertainment to them.

Verse 26

Earthquake (seismos). Old word from seiô, to shake. Luke regarded it as an answer to prayer as in Acts 4:31. He and Timothy were not in prison. So that the foundations of the prison house were shaken (hôte saleuthênai ta themelia tou desmôtêriou). Regular construction of the first aorist passive infinitive and the accusative of general reference with hôte for actual result just like the indicative. This old word for prison house already in Mat 11:2; Acts 5:21, 23 which see. Themelia is neuter plural of the adjective themelios, from thema (thing laid down from tithêmi). So already in Luke 6:48; Luke 14:29. If the prison was excavated from rocks in the hillside, as was often the case, the earthquake would easily have slipped the bars of the doors loose and the chains would have fallen out of the walls. Were opened (êneôichthêsan). First aorist passive indicative of anoigô (or -numi) with triple augment (ê, e, ô), while there is no augment in anethê (first aorist passive indicative of aniêmi, were loosed), old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 27:40; Eph 6:9; Heb 13:5.

Verse 27

Being roused out of sleep (exupnos genomenos). Becoming exupnos (rare word, only here in N.T., in LXX and Josephus). An earthquake like that would wake up any one. Open (aneôigmenos). Perfect passive participle with double reduplication in predicate position, standing open. Drew his sword (spasamenos tèn machairan). First aorist middle participle of spaô, to draw, as in Mark 14:47, drawing his own sword himself. Our word spasm from this old word. Was about (êmellen). Imperfect active of mellô with both syllabic and temporal augment and followed here by present infinitive. He was on the point of committing suicide as Brutus had done near here. Stoicism had made suicide popular as the escape from trouble like the Japanese harikari. Had escaped (ekpēpheugenai). Second perfect active infinitive of ekpēheugô, old verb with perfective force of ek, to flee out, to get clean away. This infinitive and accusative of general reference is due to indirect discourse after nomizôn. Probably the prisoners were so panic stricken by the earthquake that they did not rally to the possibility of escape before the jailor awoke. He was responsible for the prisoners with his life (Acts 12:19; Acts 27:42).

Verse 28

Do thyself no harm (mêden praxêis seautôi kakon). The usual construction (mê and the aorist subjunctive) for a prohibition not to begin to do a thing. The older Greek would probably have used poiêsêis here. The later Greek does not always preserve the old distinction between poieô, to do a thing, and prassô, to practice, though prassete keeps it in Php 4:9 and poieô is rightly used in Luke 3:10-14. As a matter of fact prassô does not occur in Matthew or in Mark, only twice in John, six times in Luke's Gospel, thirteen in Acts, and elsewhere by Paul. Sprang in (eispêdêsen). First aorist active of eispêdaô, old verb, but here only in the N.T. Cf. ekpêdaô in Acts 14:14. The jailor was at the outer door and he wanted lights to see what was inside in the inner prison.

Verse 29

Trembling for fear (entromos genomenos). "Becoming terrified." The adjective entromos (in terror) occurs in N.T. only here and Acts 7:32; Heb 12:21. Fell down (prosepesen). Second aorist active indicative of prospiptô, old verb. An act of worship as Cornelius before Peter (Acts 10:25), when prosekunêsen is used.

Verse 30

Brought them out (progagôn autous exô). Second aorist active participle of proagô, to lead forward. He left the other prisoners inside, feeling that he had to deal with these men whom he had evidently heard preach or had heard of their message as servants of the Most High God as the slave girl called them. There may have been superstition behind his fear, but there was evident sincerity.

Verse 31

To be saved (hina sôthô). Final clause with hina and first aorist passive subjunctive. What did he mean by "saved"? Certainly more than escape from peril about the prisoners or because of the earthquake, though these had their influences on him. Cf. way of salvation in verse Acts 16:17. Believe on the Lord Jesus (Pisteuson epi ton kurion Iêsoun). This is what Peter told Cornelius (Acts 10:43). This is the heart of the matter for both the jailor and his house.

Verse 32

They spake the word of God (elalêsan ton logon tou theou). So Paul and Silas gave fuller exposition of the way of life to the jailor "with all that were in his house." It was a remarkable service with keenest attention and interest, the jailor with his warden, slaves, and family.

Verse 33

Washed their stripes (elousen apo tôn plêgôn). Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 227) cites an inscription of Pergamum with this very construction of apo and the ablative, to wash off, though it is an old verb. This first aorist active indicative of louô, to bathe, succinctly shows what the jailor did to remove the stains left by the rods of the lictors (verse Acts 16:22). Niptô was used for washing parts of the body. And was baptized, he and all his, immediately (kai ebaptisthê autos kai hoi autou hapantes parachrêma). The verb is in the singular agreeing with autos, but it is to be supplied with hoi autou, and it was done at once.

Verse 34

He brought them up (anagagôn). Second aorist active participle of anagô. It looks as if his house was above the prison. The baptism apparently took place in the pool or tank in which he bathed Paul and Silas (De Wette) or the rectangular basin (impluvium) in the court for receiving the rain or even in a swimming pool or bath (kolumbêthra) found within the walls of the prison (Kuinoel). Meyer: "Perhaps the water was in the court of the house; and the baptism was that of immersion, which formed an essential part of the symbolism of the act." Set meat (parethêken trapezan). Set a "table" before them with food on it. They had probably had no food for a day. With all his house (panoikei). Adverb, once in Plato, though usually panoikiâi. In LXX, but here alone in the N.T. It is in an amphibolous position and can be taken either with "rejoiced" (êgalliasato) or "having believed" (pepisteukôs, perfect active participle, permanent belief), coming between them. The whole household (family, warden, slaves) heard the word of God, believed in the Lord Jesus, made confession, were baptized, and rejoiced. Furneaux considers the haste in baptism here "precipitate" as in the baptism of the eunuch. But why delay?

Verse 35

The serjeants (tous rhabdouchous). Fasces-bearers, regular Greek word (rhabdos, echô) for Latin lictores though Cicero says that they should carry baculi, not fasces. Was this message because of the earthquake, the influence of Lydia, or a belated sense of justice on the part of the magistrates (praetors)? Perhaps a bit of all three may be true. The Codex Bezae expressly says that the magistrates "assembled together in the market place and recollecting the earthquake that had happened they were afraid."

Verse 36

Now therefore (nun oun). Note both particles (time and inference). It was a simple matter to the jailor and he was full of glee over this happy outcome.

Verse 37

Unto them (pros autous). The lictors by the jailor. The reply of Paul is a marvel of brevity and energy, almost every word has a separate indictment showing the utter illegality of the whole proceeding. They have beaten us (deirantes hēmas). First aorist active participle of derō, old verb to flay, to skin, to smite. The Lex Valeria B.C. 509 and the Lex Poscia B.C. 248 made it a crime to inflict blows on a Roman citizen. Cicero says, "To fetter a Roman citizen was a crime, to scourge him a scandal, to slay him--parricide." Claudius had "deprived the city of Rhodes of its freedom for having crucified some citizen of Rome" (Rackham). Publicly (dēmosiâi). This added insult to injury. Common adverb (hodōi) supplied with adjective, associative instrumental case, opposed to idiâi or kat' oikous, Acts 20:20) Uncondemned (akatakritous). This same verbal adjective from kata-krinō with a privative is used by Paul in Acts 22:25 and nowhere else in the N.T. Rare in late Greek like akatagnōstos, but in late Koin, (papyri, inscriptions). The meaning is clearly "without being tried." Paul and Silas were not given a chance to make a defence. They were sentenced unheard (Acts 25:16). Even slaves in Roman law had a right to be heard. Men that are Romans (anthrōpous Romaious huparchontas). The praetors did not know, of course, that Paul and Silas were Roman citizens any more than Lysias knew it in Acts 22:27. Paul's claim is not challenged in either instance. It was a capital offence to make a false claim to Roman citizenship. Have cast us into prison (ebalan eis phulakên). Second aorist active indicative of ballō, old verb, with first aorist ending as often in the Koin, (-an, not -on). This was the climax, treating them as criminals. And now privily (kai nun lathrâi). Paul balances their recent conduct with the former. Nay verily, but (ou gar, alla). No indeed! It is the use of gar so common in answers

(ge+ara) as in Mat 27:23. Alla gives the sharp alternative. Themselves (autoi). As a public acknowledgment that they had wronged and mistreated Paul and Silas. Let them come themselves and lead us out (exagagetōsan, third person plural second aorist active imperative of exagō). It was a bitter pill to the proud praetors.

Verse 39

They feared (ephobêthêsan). This is the explanation. They became frightened for their own lives when they saw what they had done to Roman citizens. They asked (êrôtôn). Imperfect active of erôtaō. They kept on begging them to leave for fear of further trouble. The colonists in Philippi would turn against the praetors if they learned the facts, proud as they were of being citizens. This verb in the Koin, is often used as here to make a request and not just to ask a question.

Verse 40

Into the house of Lydia (pros tēn Ludian). No word in the Greek for "house," but it means the house of Lydia. Note "the brethren" here, not merely Luke and Timothy, but other brethren now converted besides those in the house of the jailor. The four missionaries were guests of Lydia (verse Acts 16:15) and probably the church now met in her home. They departed (exêlthan). Paul and Silas, but not Luke and Timothy. Note "they" here, not "we." Note also the -an ending instead of -on as above. The movements of Timothy are not perfectly clear till he reappears at Beroea (Acts 17:15). It seems unlikely that he came to Thessalonica with Paul and Silas since only Paul and Silas obtained security there (Acts 17:9) and were sent on to Beroea (Acts 17:10). Probably Timothy was sent to Thessalonica from Philippi with gifts of which Paul spoke later (Php 4:15). Then he followed Paul and Silas to Beroea.

Chapter 17

When they had passed through (diodeusantes). First aorist active participle of diodeuō, common verb in the Koin, (Polybius, Plutarch, LXX, etc.), but in the N.T. only here and Luke 8:1. It means literally to make one's way (hodos) through (dia). They took the Egnatian Way, one of the great Roman roads from Byzantium to Dyrrachium (over 500 miles long) on the Adriatic Sea, opposite Brundisium and so an extension of the Appian Way. Amphipolis (tên Amphipolin). So called because the Strymon flowed almost around (amphi) it, the metropolis of Macedonia Prima, a free city, about 32 miles from Philippi, about three miles from the sea. Paul and Silas may have spent only a night here or longer. Apollonia (tên Apollônian). Not the famous Apollonia in Illyria, but 32 miles from Amphipolis on the Egnatian Way. So here again a night was spent if no more. Why Paul hurried through these two large cities, if he did, we do not know. There are many gaps in Luke's narrative that we have no way of filling up. There may have been no synagogues for one thing. To Thessalonica (eis Thessalonikên). There was a synagogue here in this great commercial city, still an important city called Saloniki, of 70,000 population. It was originally called Therma, at the head of the Thermaic Gulf. Cassander renamed it Thessalonica after his wife, the sister of Alexander the Great. It was the capital of the second of the four divisions of Macedonia and finally the capital of the whole province. It shared with Corinth and Ephesus the commerce of the Aegean. One synagogue shows that even in this commercial city the Jews were not very numerous. As a political centre it ranked with Antioch in Syria and Caesarea in Palestine. It was a strategic centre for the spread of the gospel as Paul later said for it sounded (echoed) forth from Thessalonica throughout Macedonia and Achaia (1Th 1:8).

Verse 2

As his custom was (kata to eiôthos tôi Paulôi). The same construction in Luke 4:16 about Jesus in Nazareth (kata to eiôthos autôi) with the second perfect active participle neuter singular from ethô. Paul's habit was to go to the Jewish synagogue to use the Jews and the God-fearers as a springboard for his work among the Gentiles. For three Sabbaths (epi sabbata tria). Probably the reference is to the first three Sabbaths when Paul had a free hand in the synagogue as at first in Antioch in Pisidia. Luke does not say that Paul was in Thessalonica only three weeks. He may have spoken there also during the week, though the Sabbath was the great day. Paul makes it plain, as Furneaux shows, that he was in Thessalonica a much longer period than three weeks. The rest of the time he spoke, of course, outside of the synagogue. Paul implies an extended stay by his language in 1Th 1:8. The church consisted mainly of Gentile converts (2Th 3:4, 7, 8) and seems to have been well organized (1Th 5:12). He received help while there several times from Philippi (Php 4:16) and even so worked night and day to support himself (1Th 2:9). His preaching was misunderstood there in spite of careful instruction concerning the second coming of Christ (1Th 4:13-5:5; 2Th 2:1-12). Reasoned (dielexato). First aorist middle indicative of dialegomai, old verb in the active to select, distinguish, then to revolve in the mind, to converse (interchange of ideas), then to teach in the Socratic ("dialectic") method of question and answer (cf. dielegeto in verse Acts 17:17), then simply to discourse, but always with the idea of intellectual stimulus. With these Jews and God-fearers Paul appealed to the Scriptures as text and basis (apo) of his ideas.

Opening and alleging (dianoigôn kai paratithemenos). Opening the Scriptures, Luke means, as made plain by the mission and message of Jesus, the same word (dianoigô) used by him of the interpretation of the Scriptures by Jesus (Luke 24:32) and of the opening of the mind of the disciples also by Jesus (Luke 24:45) and of the opening of Lydia's heart by the Lord (Acts 16:14). One cannot refrain from saying that such exposition of the Scriptures as Jesus and Paul gave would lead to more opening of mind and heart. Paul was not only "expounding" the Scriptures, he was also "propounding" (the old meaning of "allege") his doctrine or setting forth alongside the Scriptures (para-tithemenos), quoting the Scripture to prove his contention which was made in much conflict (1Th 2:2), probably in the midst of heated discussion by the opposing rabbis who were anything but convinced by Paul's powerful arguments, for the Cross was a stumbling-block to the Jews (1Co 1:23). That it behoved the Christ to suffer (hoti ton Christon edei pathein). The second aorist active infinitive is the subject of edei with ton Christon, the accusative of general reference. This is Paul's major premise in his argument from the Scriptures about the Messiah, the necessity of his sufferings according to the Scriptures, the very argument made by the Risen Jesus to the two on the way to Emmaus (Luke 24:25-27). The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah was a passage in point that the rabbis had overlooked. Peter made the same point in Acts 3:18 and Paul again in Acts 26:23. The minor premise is the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. To rise again from the dead (anastênai ek nekrôn). This second aorist active infinitive anastênai is also the subject of edei. The actual resurrection of Jesus was also a necessity as Paul says he preached to them (1Th 4:14) and argued always from Scripture (1Co 15:3-4) and from his own experience (Acts 9:22; Acts 22:7; Acts 26:8, 14; 1Co 15:8). This Jesus is the Christ (houtos estin ho Christos, ho Iêsous). More precisely, "This is the Messiah, viz., Jesus whom I am proclaiming unto you." This is the conclusion of Paul's line of argument and it is logical and overwhelming. It is his method everywhere as in Damascus, in Antioch in Pisidia, here, in Corinth. He spoke as an eye-witness.

Some of them (tines ex autôn). That is of the Jews who were evidently largely afraid of the rabbis. Still "some" were persuaded (epeisthêsan, effective first aorist passive indicative) and "consorted with" (proseklêrôthêsan). This latter verb is also first aorist passive indicative of prosklêroô, a common verb in late Greek (Plutarch, Lucian), but only here in the N.T., from pros and klêros, to assign by lot. So then this small group of Jews were given Paul and Silas by God's grace. And of the devout Greeks a great multitude (tôn te sebomenôn Hellênôn plêthos polu). These "God-fearers" among the Gentiles were less under the control of the jealous rabbis and so responded more readily to Paul's appeal. In 1Th 1:9 Paul expressly says that they had "turned to God from idols," proof that this church was mainly Gentile (cf. also 1Th 2:14). And of the chief women not a few (gunaikôn te tôn prôtôn ouk oligai). Literally, "And of women the first not a few." That is, a large number of women of the very first rank in the city, probably devout women also like the men just before and like those in Acts 13:50 in Antioch in Pisidia who along with "the first men of the city" were stirred up against Paul. Here these women were openly friendly to Paul's message, whether proselytes or Gentiles or Jewish wives of Gentiles as Hort holds. It is noteworthy that here, as in Philippi, leading women take a bold stand for Christ. In Macedonia women had more freedom than elsewhere. It is not to be inferred that all those converted belonged to the higher classes, for the industrial element was clearly large (1Th 4:11). In 2Co 8:2 Paul speaks of the deep poverty of the Macedonian churches, but with Philippi mainly in mind. Ramsay thinks that Paul won many of the heathen not affiliated at all with the synagogue. Certain it is that we must allow a considerable interval of time between verses Acts 17:4, 5 to understand what Paul says in his Thessalonian Epistles.

Verse 5

Moved with jealousy (zêlôsantes). Both our English words, zeal and jealousy, are from the Greek zêlos. In Acts 13:45 the Jews (rabbis) "were filled with jealousy" (epêsthêsan zêlou). That is another way of saying the same thing as here. The success of Paul was entirely too great in both places to please the rabbis. So here is jealousy of Jewish preachers towards Christian preachers. It is always between men or women of the same profession or group. In 1Th 2:3-10 Paul hints at some of the slanders spread against him by these rabbis (deceivers, using words of flattery as men-pleasers, after vain-glory, greed of gain, etc.). Took unto them (proslabomenoi). Second aorist middle (indirect, to themselves) participle of proslambanô, old and common verb. Certain vile fellows of the rabble (tôn agoraïôn andras tinas ponêrous). The agora or market-place was the natural resort for those with nothing to do (Mat 20:4) like the court-house square today or various parks in our cities where bench-warmers flock. Plato (Protagoras 347 C) calls these agoraïoi (common word, but in N.T. only here and Acts 19:38) idlers or good-for-nothing fellows. They are in every city and such "bums" are ready for any job. The church in Thessalonica caught some of these peripatetic idlers (2Th 3:10) "doing nothing but doing about." So the Jewish preachers gather to themselves a choice collection of these market-loungers or loafers or wharf-rats. The Romans called them subrostrani (hangers round the rostrum or subbasilicari). Gathering a crowd (ochlopoiêsantes). Literally, making or getting (poiêô) a crowd (ochlos), a word not found elsewhere. Probably right in the agora itself where the rabbis could tell men their duties and pay them in advance. Instance Hyde Park in London with all the curious gatherings every day, Sunday afternoons in particular. Set the city on an uproar (ethoruboun). Imperfect active of thorubeô, from thorubos (tumult), old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 20:10; Mat 9:23; Mark 4:39. They kept up the din, this combination of rabbis and rabble. Assaulting the house of Jason (epistantes têi oikiâi Iasonos). Second aorist (ingressive) active of ephistêmi, taking a stand against, rushing at, because he was Paul's host. He may have been a Gentile (Jason the name of an ancient king of Thessaly), but the Jews often used it for Joshua or Jesus (II Macc. 1:7). They sought (ezêtoun). Imperfect active. They burst into the house and searched up and down. Them (autous). Paul and Silas. They were getting ready to have a lynching party.

When they found them not (mê heurontes). Usual negative mê with the participle in the Koin., second aorist (effective) active participle, complete failure with all the noise and "bums." They dragged (esuron). Imperfect active, vivid picture, they were dragging (literally). See already Acts 8:3; Acts 16:19. If they could not find Paul, they could drag Jason his host and some other Christians whom we do not know. Before the rulers of the city (epi tous politarchas). This word does not occur in Greek literature and used to be cited as an example of Luke's blunders. But now it is found in an inscription on an arch in the modern city preserved in the British Museum. It is also found in seventeen inscriptions (five from Thessalonica) where the word or the verb politarcheô occurs. It is a fine illustration of the historical accuracy of Luke in matters of detail. This title for city officers in Thessalonica, a free city, is correct. They were burgomasters or "rulers of the city." Crying (boôntes). Yelling as if the house was on fire like the mob in Jerusalem (Acts 21:28). These that have turned the world upside down (hoi tên oikoumenên anastatôsantes). The use of oikoumenên (supply gen or chôran, the inhabited earth, present passive participle of oikeô) means the Roman Empire, since it is a political charge, a natural hyperbole in their excitement, but the phrase occurs for the Roman Empire in Luke 2:1. It is possible that news had come to Thessalonica of the expulsion of the Jews from Rome by Claudius. There is truth in the accusation, for Christianity is revolutionary, but on this particular occasion the uproar (verse Acts 17:5) was created by the rabbis and the hired loafers. The verb anastatoô (here first aorist active participle) does not occur in the ancient writers, but is in LXX and in Acts 17:6; Acts 21:38; Gal 5:12. It occurs also in Harpocration (A.D. 4th cent.) and about 100 B.C. exanastatoô is found in a fragment of papyrus (Tebtunis no. 2) and in a Paris Magical Papyrus l. 2243 But in an Egyptian letter of Aug. 4, 41 A.D. (Oxyrhynchus Pap. no. 119, 10) "the bad boy" uses it = "he upsets me" or " he drives me out of my senses" (anastatoi me). See Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, pp. 84f. It is not a "Biblical word" at all, but belongs to the current Koin,. It is a vigorous and graphic term.

Verse 7

Whom Jason hath received (hous hupodedektai Iasôn). Present perfect middle indicative of hupodechomai, to entertain, old verb, but in N.T. only in Luke 10:38; Luke 19:6; Acts 17:7; Jas 2:25. This is Jason's crime and he is the prisoner before the politarchs. These all (houtoi pantes). Jason, the "brethren" of verse Acts 17:6, Paul and Silas, and all Christians everywhere. Contrary (apenanti). Late compound preposition (apo, en, anti) found in Polybius, LXX, here only in the N.T. The decrees of Caesar (tôn dogmatôn Kaisaros). This was a charge of treason and was a sure way to get a conviction. Probably the Julian Leges Majestatis are in mind rather than the definite decree of Claudius about the Jews (Acts 18:2). Saying that there is another king, one Jesus (Basilea heteron legontes einai Iêsoun). Note the very order of the words in the Greek indirect discourse with the accusative and infinitive after legontes. Basilea heteron comes first, a different king, another emperor than Caesar. This was the very charge that the smart student of the Pharisees and Herodians had tried to catch Jesus on (Mark 12:14). The Sanhedrin made it anyhow against Jesus to Pilate (Luke 23:2) and Pilate had to notice it. "Although the emperors never ventured to assume the title rex at Rome, in the Eastern provinces they were regularly termed basileus" (Page). The Jews here, as before Pilate (John 19:15), renounce their dearest hope of a Messianic king. It is plain that Paul had preached about Jesus as the Messiah, King of the Kingdom of God over against the Roman Empire, a spiritual kingdom, to be sure, but the Jews here turn his language to his hurt as they did with Jesus. As a matter of fact Paul's preaching about the kingdom and the second coming of Christ was gravely misunderstood by the Christians at Thessalonica after his departure (1Th 4:13-5:4; 2Th 2). The Jews were quick to seize upon his language about Jesus Christ to his own injury. Clearly here in Thessalonica Paul had faced the power of the Roman Empire in a new way and pictured over against it the grandeur of the reign of Christ.

Verse 8

They troubled the multitude and the rulers (etaraxan ton ochlon kai tous politarchas). First aorist active of tarassô, old verb to agitate. The excitement of the multitude "agitated" the politarchs still more. To the people it meant a revolution, to the politarchs a charge of complicity in treason if they let it pass. They had no way to disprove the charge of treason and Paul and Silas were not present.

Verse 9

When they had taken security (labontes to hikanon). A Greek idiom=latin satis accipere, to receive the sufficient (bond), usually money for the fulfilment of the judgment. Probably the demand was made of Jason that he see to it that Paul and Silas leave the city not to return. In 1Th 2:17. Paul may refer to this in mentioning his inability to visit these Thessalonians again. The idiom labanein to hikanon now is found in two inscriptions of the second century A.D. (O. G. I. S. 484, 50 and 629, 101). In Vol. III Oxyrhynchus Papyri no. 294 A.D. 22 the corresponding phrase dounai heikanon ("to give security") appears. They let them go (apelusan autous). The charge was serious but the proof slim so that the politarchs were glad to be rid of the case.

Verse 10

Immediately by night (eutheôs dia nuktos). Paul's work had not been in vain in Thessalonica (1Th 1:7; 1Th 2:13, 20). Paul loved the church here. Two of them, Aristarchus and Secundus, will accompany him to Jerusalem (Acts 20:4) and Aristarchus will go on with him to Rome (Acts 27:2). Plainly Paul and Silas had been in hiding in Thessalonica and in real danger. After his departure severe persecution came to the Christians in Thessalonica (1Th 2:14; 1Th 3:1-5; 2Th 1:6). It is possible that there was an escort of Gentile converts with Paul and Silas on this night journey to Beroea which was about fifty miles southwest from Thessalonica near Pella in another district of Macedonia (Emathia). There is a modern town there of some 6,000 people. Went (apêiesan). Imperfect third plural active of apeimi, old verb to go away, here alone in the N.T. A literary, almost Atticistic, form instead of apêlthon. Into the synagogue of the Jews (eis tēn sunagôgēn tōn Ioudaiōn). Paul's usual custom and he lost no time about it. Enough Jews here to have a synagogue.

Verse 11

More noble than those (eugenesteroi tōn). Comparative form of eugenēs, old and common adjective, but in N.T. only here and Luke 19:12; 1Co 1:26. Followed by ablative case tōn as often after the comparative. With all readiness of mind (meta pāsēs prothumias). Old word from prothumos (pro, thumos) and means eagerness, rushing forward. In the N.T. only here and 2Co 8:11-19; 2Co 9:2. In Thessalonica many of the Jews out of pride and prejudice refused to listen. Here the Jews joyfully welcomed the two Jewish visitors. Examining the Scriptures daily (kath' hēmeran anakrinontes tas graphas). Paul expounded the Scriptures daily as in Thessalonica, but the Bereans, instead of resenting his new interpretation, examined (anakrinō means to sift up and down, make careful and exact research as in legal processes as in Acts 4:9; Acts 12:19, etc.) the Scriptures for themselves. In Scotland people have the Bible open on the preacher as he expounds the passage, a fine habit worth imitating. Whether these things were so (ei echoi tauta houtōs). Literally, "if these things had it thus." The present optative in the indirect question represents an original present indicative as in Luke 1:29 (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1043f.). This use of ei with the optative may be looked at as the condition of the fourth class (undetermined with less likelihood of determination) as in Acts 17:27; Acts 20:16; Acts 24:19; Acts 27:12 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). The Bereans were eagerly interested in the new message of Paul and Silas but they wanted to see it for themselves. What a noble attitude. Paul's preaching made Bible students of them. The duty of private interpretation is thus made plain (Hovey).

Verse 12

Many therefore (Polloi men oun). As a result of this Bible study. Also of the Greek women of honourable estate. The word Hellénis means Greek woman, but the word gunê is added. In particular women of rank (euschêmonôn, from eu and echô, graceful figure and the honourable standing) as in Acts 13:50 (Mark 15:43). Probably Luke means by implication that the "men" (andrôn) were also noble Greeks though he does not expressly say so. So then the Jews were more open to the message, the proselytes or God-fearers followed suit, with "not a few" (ouk oligoi) real Greeks (both men and women) believing. It was quick and fine work.

Verse 13

Was proclaimed (katêggelê). Second aorist passive indicative of kataggellô, common late verb as in Acts 16:21. Of Paul (hupo Paulou). By Paul, of course. Stirring up and troubling the multitudes (saleuontes kai tarassontes tous ochlous). Shaking the crowds like an earthquake (Acts 4:31) and disturbing like a tornado (Acts 17:8). Success at Thessalonica gave the rabbis confidence and courage. The attack was sharp and swift. The Jews from Antioch in Pisidia had likewise pursued Paul to Iconium and Lystra. How long Paul had been in Berea Luke does not say. But a church was established here which gave a good account of itself later and sent a messenger (Acts 20:4) with their part of the collection to Jerusalem. This quiet and noble town was in a whirl of excitement over the attacks of the Jewish emissaries from Thessalonica who probably made the same charge of treason against Paul and Silas.

And then immediately (eutheôs de tote). They acted swiftly as in Thessalonica. Sent forth (exapesteilan). Double compound (ex, apo, both out and away) common in late Greek. First aorist active indicative (exapostellô, liquid verb). Same form in Acts 9:30. As far as to the sea (heôs epi tēn thalassan). It is not clear whether Paul went all the way to Athens by land or took ship at Dium or Pydna, some sixteen miles away, and sailed to Athens. Some even think that Paul gave the Jews the slip and went all the way by land when they expected him to go by sea. At any rate we know that Paul was grieved to cut short his work in Macedonia, probably not over six months in all, which had been so fruitful in Philippi, Thessalonica, and Beroea. Silas and Timothy (note his presence) remained behind in Beroea and they would keep the work going. Paul no doubt hoped to return soon. Silas and Timothy in Beroea would also serve to screen his flight for the Jews wanted his blood, not theirs. The work in Macedonia spread widely (1Th 1:7).

Verse 15

But they that conducted Paul (hoi de kathistanontes ton Paulon). Articular present active participle of kathistanô (late form in A B of kathistēmi or kathistaô), an old verb with varied uses to put down, to constitute, to conduct, etc. This use here is in the LXX (Jos 6:23) and old Greek also. To Athens (heôs Athênôn). To make sure of his safe arrival. That they should come to him with all speed (hina hōs tachista elthōsin pros auton). Note the neat Greek idiom hōs tachista as quickly as possible (good Attic idiom). The indirect command and purpose (hina-elthōsin, second aorist active subjunctive) is also neat Greek (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1046). Departed (exēiesan). Imperfect active of exeimi, old Greek word, but rare in N.T. All in Acts (Acts 13:42; Acts 17:15; Acts 20:7; Acts 27:43)

Verse 16

Now while Paul waited for them in Athens (En de tais Athēnais ekdechomenou autous tou Paulou). Genitive absolute with present middle participle of ekdechomai, old verb to receive, but only with the sense of looking out for, expecting found here and elsewhere in N.T. We know that Timothy did come to Paul in Athens (1Th 3:1, 6) from Thessalonica and was sent back to them from Athens. If Silas also came to Athens, he was also sent away, possibly to Philippi, for that church was deeply interested in Paul. At any rate both Timothy and Silas came from Macedonia to Corinth with messages and relief for Paul (Acts 18:5; 2Co 11:8). Before they came and after they left, Paul felt lonely in Athens (1Th 3:1), the first time on this tour or the first that he has been completely without fellow workers. Athens had been captured by Sulla B.C. 86. After various changes Achaia, of which Corinth is the capital, is a separate province from Macedonia and A.D. 44 was restored by Claudius to the Senate with the Proconsul at Corinth. Paul is probably here about A.D. 50. Politically Athens is no longer of importance when Paul comes though it is still the university seat of the world with all its rich environment and traditions. Rackham grows eloquent over Paul the Jew of Tarsus being in the city of Pericles and Demosthenes, Socrates and Plato and Aristotle, Sophocles and Euripides. In its Agora Socrates had taught, here was the Academy of Plato, the Lyceum of Aristotle, the Porch of Zeno, the Garden of Epicurus. Here men still talked about philosophy, poetry, politics, religion, anything and everything. It was the art centre of the world. The Parthenon, the most beautiful of temples, crowned the Acropolis. Was Paul insensible to all this cultural environment? It is hard to think so for he was a university man of Tarsus and he makes a number of allusions to Greek writers. Probably it had not been in Paul's original plan to evangelize Athens, difficult as all university seats are, but he cannot be idle though here apparently by chance because driven out of Macedonia. Was provoked (parôxuneto). Imperfect passive of paroxunô, old verb to sharpen, to stimulate, to irritate (from para, oxus), from paroxusmos (Acts 15:39), common in old Greek, but in N.T. only here and 1Co 13:5. It was a continual challenge to Paul's spirit when he beheld (theôrountos, genitive of present participle agreeing with autou (his), though late MSS. have locative theôrounti agreeing with en autôi). The city full of idols (kateidôlon ousan tèn polin). Note the participle ousan not preserved in the English (either the city being full of idols or that the city was full of idols, sort of indirect discourse). Paul, like any stranger was looking at the sights as he walked around. This adjective kateidôlon (perfective use of kata and eidôlon is found nowhere else, but it is formed after the analogy of katampelos, katadendron), full of idols. Xenophon (de Republ. Ath.) calls the city holê bomos, holê thuma theois kai anathêma (all altar, all sacrifice and offering to the gods).

These statues were beautiful, but Paul was not deceived by the mere art for art's sake. The idolatry and sensualism of it all glared at him (Rom 1:18-32). Renan ridicules Paul's ignorance in taking these statues for idols, but Paul knew paganism better than Renan. The superstition of this centre of Greek culture was depressing to Paul. One has only to recall how superstitious cults today flourish in the atmosphere of Boston and Los Angeles to understand conditions in Athens. Pausanias says that Athens had more images than all the rest of Greece put together. Pliny states that in the time of Nero Athens had over 30,000 public statues besides countless private ones in the homes. Petronius sneers that it was easier to find a god than a man in Athens. Every gateway or porch had its protecting god. They lined the street from the Piraeus and caught the eye at every place of prominence on wall or in the agora.

Verse 17

So he reasoned (dielegeto men oun). Accordingly therefore, with his spirit stirred by the proof of idolatry. Imperfect middle of dialegô, same verb used in verse Acts 17:2 which see. First he reasoned in the synagogue at the services to the Jews and the God-fearers, then daily in the agora or marketplace (southwest of the Acropolis, between it and the Areopagus and the Pnyx) to the chance-comers, "them that met him" (pros tous paratugchanontas). Simultaneously with the synagogue preaching at other hours Paul took his stand like Socrates before him and engaged in conversation with (pros) those who happened by. This old verb, paratugchanô, occurs here alone in the N.T. and accurately pictures the life in the agora. The listeners to Paul in the agora would be more casual than those who stop for street preaching, a Salvation Army meeting, a harangue from a box in Hyde Park. It was a slim chance either in synagogue or in agora, but Paul could not remain still with all the reeking idolatry around him. The boundaries of the agora varied, but there was always the Poikilê Stoa (the Painted Porch), over against the Acropolis on the west. In this Stoa (Porch) Zeno and other philosophers and rhetoricians held forth from time to time. Paul may have stood near this spot.

Verse 18

And certain also of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers encountered him (tines de kai tôn Epikourion kai Stôikôn philosophôn suneballon autôi). Imperfect active of sunballô, old verb, in the N.T. only by Luke, to bring or put together in one's mind (Luke 2:19), to meet together (Acts 20:14), to bring together aid (Acts 18:27), to confer or converse or dispute as here and already Acts 4:15 which see. These professional philosophers were always ready for an argument and so they frequented the agora for that purpose. Luke uses one article and so groups the two sects together in their attitude toward Paul, but they were very different in fact. Both sects were eager for argument and both had disdain for Paul, but they were the two rival practical philosophies of the day, succeeding the more abstruse theories of Plato and Aristotle. Socrates had turned men's thought inward (Gnôthi Seauton, Know Thyself) away from the mere study of physics. Plato followed with a profound development of the inner self (metaphysics). Aristotle with his cyclopaedic grasp sought to unify and relate both physics and metaphysics. Both Zeno and Epicurus (340-272 B.C.) took a more practical turn in all this intellectual turmoil and raised the issues of everyday life. Zeno (360-260 B.C.) taught in the Stoa (Porch) and so his teaching was called Stoicism. He advanced many noble ideas that found their chief illustration in the Roman philosophers (Seneca, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius). He taught self-mastery and hardness with an austerity that ministered to pride or suicide in case of failure, a distinctly selfish and unloving view of life and with a pantheistic philosophy. Epicurus considered practical atheism the true view of the universe and denied a future life and claimed pleasure as the chief thing to be gotten out of life. He did not deny the existence of gods, but regarded them as unconcerned with the life of men. The Stoics called Epicurus an atheist. Lucretius and Horace give the Epicurean view of life in their great poems. This low view of life led to sensualism and does today, for both Stoicism and Epicureanism are widely influential with people now. "Eat and drink for tomorrow we die," they preached. Paul had doubtless become acquainted with both of these philosophies for they were widely prevalent over the world. Here he confronts them in their very home. He is challenged by past-masters in the art of appealing to the senses, men as skilled in their dialectic as the Pharisaic rabbis with whom Paul had been trained and whose subtleties he had learned how to expose. But, so far as we know, this is a new experience for Paul to have a public dispute with these philosophical experts who had a natural contempt for all Jews and for rabbis in particular, though they found Paul a new type at any rate and so with some interest in him. "In Epicureanism, it was man's sensual nature which arrayed itself against the claims of the gospel; in Stoicism it was his self-righteousness and pride of intellect" (Hackett). Knowing calls the Stoic the Pharisee of philosophy and the Epicurean the Sadducee of philosophy. Socrates in this very agora used to try to interest the passers-by in some desire for better things. That was 450 years before Paul is challenged by these superficial sophisticated Epicureans and Stoics. It is doubtful if Paul had ever met a more difficult situation. What would this babblers say? (Ti an theloi ho spermologos houtos legein?). The word for "babblers" means "seed-picker" or picker up of seeds (sperma, seed, legô, to collect) like a bird in the agora hopping about after chance seeds. Plutarch applies the word to crows that pick up grain in the fields. Demosthenes called Aeschines a spermologos. Eustathius uses it of a man hanging around in the markets picking up scraps of food that fell from the carts and so also of mere rhetoricians and plagiarists who picked up scraps of wisdom from others. Ramsay considers it here a piece of Athenian slang used to describe the picture of Paul seen by these philosophers who use it, for not all of them had it ("some," tines). Note the use of an and the present active optative theloi, conclusion of a fourth-class condition in a rhetorical question (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). It means, What would this picker up of seeds wish to say, if he should get off an idea? It is a contemptuous tone of supreme ridicule and doubtless Paul heard this comment. Probably the Epicureans made this sneer that Paul was a charlatan or quack. Other some (hoi de). But others, in contrast with the "some" just before. Perhaps the Stoics take this more serious view of Paul. He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods (zenôn daimoniôn dokei kataggeleus einai). This view is put cautiously by dokei (seems). Kataggeleus does not occur in the old Greek, though in ecclesiastical writers, but Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 99) gives an example of the word "on a marble stele recording a decree of the Mitylenaens in honour of the Emperor Augustus," where it is the herald of the games. Here alone in the N.T. Daimonion is used in the old Greek sense of deity or divinity whether good or bad, not in the N.T. sense of demons. Both this word and kataggeleus are used from the Athenian standpoint. Xenos is an old word for a guest-friend (Latin hospes) and then host (Rom 16:23), then for foreigner or stranger (Mat 25:31; Acts 17:21), new and so strange as here and Heb 13:9; 1Pe 4:12, and then aliens (Eph 2:12). This view of Paul is the first count against Socrates: Socrates does wrong, introducing new deities (adikei Sôkratês, kaina daimonia eispherôn, Xen. Mem. I). On this charge the Athenians voted the hemlock for their greatest citizen. What will they do to Paul? This Athens was more sceptical and more tolerant than the old Athens. But Roman law did not allow the introduction of a new religion (religio illicita). Paul was walking on thin ice though he was the real master philosopher and these Epicureans and Stoics were quacks. Paul had the only true philosophy of the universe and life with Jesus Christ as the centre (Col 1:12-20), the greatest of all philosophers as Ramsay justly terms him. But these men are mocking him. Because he preached Jesus and the resurrection (hoti ton Iêsoun kai tèn anastasin euëggelizato). Reason for the view just stated. Imperfect middle indicative of euaggelizô, to "gospelize." Apparently these critics considered anastasis (Resurrection) another deity on a par with Jesus. The Athenians worshipped all sorts of abstract truths and virtues and they misunderstood Paul on this subject. They will leave him as soon as he mentions the resurrection (verse Acts 17:32). It is objected that Luke would not use the word in this sense here for his readers would not understand him. But Luke is describing the misapprehension of this group of philosophers and this interpretation fits in precisely.

And they took hold of him (epilabomenoi de autou). Second aorist middle participle of epilambanô, old verb, but in the N.T. only in the middle, here with the genitive autou to lay hold of, but with no necessary sense of violence (Acts 9:27; Acts 23:27; Mark 8:23), unless the idea is that Paul was to be tried before the Court of Areopagus for the crime of bringing in strange gods. But the day for that had passed in Athens. Even so it is not clear whether "unto the Areopagus (epi ton Areion Pagon) means the Hill of Mars (west of the Acropolis, north of the agora and reached by a flight of steps in the rock) or the court itself which met elsewhere as well as on the hills, usually in fact in the Stoa Basilica opening on the agora and near to the place where the dispute had gone on. Raphael's cartoon with Paul standing on Mars Hill has made us all familiar with the common view, but it is quite uncertain if it is true. There was not room on the summit for a large gathering. If Paul was brought before the Court of Areopagus (commonly called the Areopagus as here), it was not for trial as a criminal, but simply for examination concerning his new teaching in this university city whether it was strictly legal or not. Paul was really engaged in proselytism to turn the Athenians away from their old gods to Jesus Christ. But "the court of refined and polished Athenians was very different from the rough provincial magistrates of Philippi, and the philosophers who presented Paul to their cognizance very different from the mob of Thessalonians" (Rackham). It was all very polite. May we know? (Dunametha gnônai). Can we come to know (ingressive second aorist active infinitive). This new teaching (hê kainê hautê didachê). On the position of hautê see Robertson, Grammar, pp. 700f. The question was prompted by courtesy, sarcasm, or irony. Evidently no definite charge was laid against Paul.

Verse 20

For thou bringest certain strange things (xenizonta gar tina eisphereis). The very verb used by Xenophon (Mem. I) about Socrates. Xenizonta is present active neuter plural participle of xenizô and from xenos (verse Acts 17:18), "things surprising or shocking us." We would know therefore (boulometha oun gnônai). Very polite still, we wish or desire, and repeating gnônai (the essential point).

Verse 21

Spent their time (êukairoun). Imperfect active of eukaireô. A late word to have opportunity (eu, kairos) from Polybius on. In the N.T. only here and Mark 6:31. They had time for, etc. This verse is an explanatory parenthesis by Luke. Some new thing (ti kainoteron). Literally "something newer" or "fresher" than the new, the very latest, the comparative of kainos. Demosthenes (Philipp. 1. 43) pictures the Athenians "in the agora inquiring if anything newer is said" (punthanomenoi kata tēn agoran ei ti legetai neôteron). The new soon became stale with these itching and frivolous Athenians.

Verse 22

Stood in the midst of the Areopagus (statheis en mesôi tou Areiou Pagou). First aorist passive of histēmi used of Peter in Acts 2:14. Majestic figure whether on Mars Hill or in the Stoa Basilica before the Areopagus Court. There would be a crowd of spectators and philosophers in either case and Paul seized the opportunity to preach Christ to this strange audience as he did in Caesarea before Herod Agrippa and the crowd of prominent people gathered by Festus for the entertainment. Paul does not speak as a man on trial, but as one trying to get a hearing for the gospel of Christ. Somewhat superstitious (hôs deisidaimonesterous). The Authorized Version has "too superstitious," the American Standard "very religious." Deisidaimôn is a neutral word (from deidô, to fear, and daimôn, deity). The Greeks used it either in the good sense of pious or religious or the bad sense of superstitious. Thayer suggests that Paul uses it "with kindly ambiguity." Page thinks that Luke uses the word to represent the religious feeling of the Athenians (religiosus) which bordered on superstition. The Vulgate has superstitiosiores. In Acts 25:19 Festus uses the term deisidaimonia for "religion." It seems unlikely that Paul should give this audience a slap in the face at the very start. The way one takes this adjective here colours Paul's whole speech before the Council of Areopagus. The comparative here as in verse Acts 17:21 means more religions than usual (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 664f.), the object of the comparison not being expressed. The Athenians had a tremendous reputation for their devotion to religion, "full of idols" (verse Acts 17:16).

For (gar). Paul gives an illustration of their religiousness from his own experiences in their city. The objects of your worship (ta sebasmata humôn). Late word from sebazomai, to worship. In N T. only here and 2Th 2:4. The use of this word for temples, altars, statues, shows the conciliatory tone in the use of deisidaimonesterous in verse Acts 17:22. An altar (bômon). Old word, only here in the N.T. and the only mention of a heathen altar in the N.T. With this inscription (en hôi epegegrapto). On which had been written (stood written), past perfect passive indicative of epigraphô, old and common verb for writing on inscriptions (epigraphê, Luke 23:38). To an Unknown God (AGNOSTO THEO). Dative case, dedicated to. Pausanias (I. 1, 4) says that in Athens there are "altars to gods unknown" (bômoi theôn agnôstôn). Epimenides in a pestilence advised the sacrifice of a sheep to the befitting god whoever he might be. If an altar was dedicated to the wrong deity, the Athenians feared the anger of the other gods. The only use in the N.T. of agnôstos, old and common adjective (from a privative and gnôstos verbal of ginôskô, to know). Our word agnostic comes from it. Here it has an ambiguous meaning, but Paul uses it though to a stern Christian philosopher it may be the "confession at once of a bastard philosophy and of a bastard religion" (Hort, Hulsean Lectures, p. 64). Paul was quick to use this confession on the part of the Athenians of a higher power than yet known to them. So he gets his theme from this evidence of a deeper religious sense in them and makes a most clever use of it with consummate skill. In ignorance (agnoountes). Present active participle of agnoeô, old verb from same root as agnôstos to which Paul refers by using it. This set I forth unto you (touto ego katagellô humin). He is a kataggeleus (verse Acts 17:18) as they suspected of a God, both old and new, old in that they already worship him, new in that Paul knows who he is. By this master stroke he has brushed to one side any notion of violation of Roman law or suspicion of heresy and claims their endorsement of his new gospel, a shrewd and consummate turn. He has their attention now and proceeds to describe this God left out of their list as the one true and Supreme God. The later MSS. here read hon--touton (whom--this one) rather than ho--touto (what--this), but the late text is plainly an effort to introduce too soon the personal nature of God which comes out clearly in verse Acts 17:24.

Verse 24

The God that made the world (Ho theos ho poiêsas ton kosmon). Not a god for this and a god for that like the 30,000 gods of the Athenians, but the one God who made the Universe (kosmos on the old Greek sense of orderly arrangement of the whole universe). And all things therein (kai panta ta en autôî). All the details in the universe were created by this one God. Paul is using the words of Isa 42:5. The Epicureans held that matter was eternal. Paul sets them aside. This one God was not to be confounded with any of their numerous gods save with this "Unknown God." Being Lord of heaven and earth (ouranou kai gês huparchôn kurios). Kurios here owner, absolute possessor of both heaven and earth (Isa 45:7), not of just parts. Dwelleth not in temples made with hands (ouken cheiropoiêtois naois katoikei). The old adjective cheiropoiêtos (cheir, poieô) already in Stephen's speech (Acts 7:48). No doubt Paul pointed to the wonderful Parthenon, supposed to be the home of Athene as Stephen denied that God dwelt alone in the temple in Jerusalem.

Verse 25

As though he needed anything (prosdeomenos tinos). Present middle participle of prosdeomai, to want besides, old verb, but here only in the N.T. This was strange doctrine for the people thought that the gods needed their offerings for full happiness. This self-sufficiency of God was taught by Philo and Lucretius, but Paul shows that the Epicurean missed it by putting God, if existing at all, outside the universe. Seeing he himself giveth to all (autos didous pasin). This Supreme Personal God is the source of life, breath, and everything. Paul here rises above all Greek philosophers.

Verse 26

And he made of one (epoiêsen te ex henos). The word haimatos (blood) is absent from Aleph A B and is a later explanatory addition. What Paul affirms is the unity of the human race with a common origin and with God as the Creator. This view runs counter to Greek exclusiveness which treated other races as barbarians and to Jewish pride which treated other nations as heathen or pagan (the Jews were laos, the Gentiles ethnê). The cosmopolitanism of Paul here rises above Jew and Greek and claims the one God as the Creator of the one race of men. The Athenians themselves claimed to be antochthonous (indigenous) and a special creation. Zeno and Seneca did teach a kind of cosmopolitanism (really pantheism) far different from the personal God of Paul. It was Rome, not Greece, that carried out the moral ideas of Zeno. Man is part of the universe (verse Acts 17:24) and God created (epoiêsen) man as he created (poiêsas) the all. For to dwell (katoikein). Infinitive (present active) of purpose, so as to dwell. Having determined (horisas). First aorist active participle of horizô, old verb to make a horizon as already in 19:42 which see. Paul here touches God's Providence. God has revealed himself in history as in creation. His hand appears in the history of all men as well as in that of the Chosen People of Israel. Appointed seasons (prostetagmenous kairous). Not the weather as in Acts 14:17, but "the times of the Gentiles" (kairoi ethnôn) of which Jesus spoke (Luke 21:24). The perfect passive participle of prostassô, old verb to enjoin, emphasizes God's control of human history without any denial of human free agency as was involved in the Stoic Fate (Heirmarmenê). Bounds (horothesias). Limits? Same idea in Job 12:23. Nations rise and fall, but it is not blind chance or hard fate. Thus there is an interplay between God's will and man's activities, difficult as it is for us to see with our shortened vision.

Verse 27

That they should seek God (Zêtein ton theon). Infinitive (present active) of purpose again. Seek him, not turn away from him as the nations had done (Rom 1:18-32). If haply they might feel after him (ei ara ge psêlaphêseian auton). First aorist active (Aeolic form) optative of psêlaphaô, old verb from psaô, to touch. So used by the Risen Jesus in his challenge to the disciples (Luke 24:39), by the Apostle John of his personal contact with Jesus (1Jn 1:1), of the contact with Mount Sinai (Heb 12:18). Here it pictures the blind groping of the darkened heathen mind after God to "find him" (heuroien, second aorist active optative) whom they had lost. One knows what it is in a darkened room to feel along the walls for the door (Deut 28:29; Job 5:14; Job 12:25; Isa 59:10). Helen Keller, when told of God, said that she knew of him already, groping in the dark after him. The optative here with ei is due to the condition of the fourth class (undetermined, but with vague hope of being determined) with aim also present (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). Note also ara ge the inferential particle ara with the delicate intensive particle ge. Though he is not far from each one of us (kai ge ou makran apo henos hekastou hêmôn huparchonta). More exactly with B L (kai ge instead of kaitoi or kaitoi ge), "and yet being not far from each one of us," a direct statement rather than a concessive one. The participle huparchonta agrees with auton and the negative ou rather than the usual me with the participle makes an emphatic negative. Note also the intensive particle ge.

Verse 28

For in him (en autôi gar). Proof of God's nearness, not stoic pantheism, but real immanence in God as God dwells in us. The three verbs (zômen, kinoumetha, esmen) form an ascending scale and reach a climax in God (life, movement, existence). Kinoumetha is either direct middle present indicative (we move ourselves) or passive (we are moved). As certain even of your own poets (hôs kai tines tôn kath' humâs poiêtôn). "As also some of the poets among you." Aratus of Soli in Cilicia (ab. B.C. 270) has these very words in his Ta Phainomena and Cleanthes, Stoic philosopher (300-220 B.C.) in his Hymn to Zeus has Ek sou gar genos esmen. In 1Co 15:32 Paul quotes from Menander and in Tit 1:12 from Epimenides. J. Rendel Harris claims that he finds allusions in Paul's Epistles to Pindar, Aristophanes, and other Greek writers. There is no reason in the world why Paul should not have acquaintance with Greek literature, though one need not strain a point to prove it. Paul, of course, knew that the words were written of Zeus (Jupiter), not of Jehovah, but he applies the idea in them to his point just made that all men are the offspring of God.

Verse 29

We ought not to think (ouk ophelomen nomizein). It is a logical conclusion (oun, therefore) from the very language of Aratus and Cleanthes. That the Godhead is like (to theion einai homoion). Infinitive with accusative of general reference in indirect discourse. To theion is strictly "the divine" nature like theiotês (Rom 1:20) rather than like theotês (Col 2:9). Paul may have used to theion here to get back behind all their notions of various gods to the real nature of God. The Athenians may even have used the term themselves. After homoios (like) the associative instrumental case is used as with chrusôî, argurôî, lithôî. Graven by art and device of man (charagmati technês kai enthumêseôs anthrôpou). Apposition with preceding and so charagmati in associative instrumental case. Literally, graven work or sculpture from charassô, to engrave, old word, but here alone in N.T. outside of Revelation (the mark of the beast). Graven work of art (technês) or external craft, and of thought or device (enthumêseôs) or internal conception of man.

Verse 30

The times of ignorance (tous chronous tês agnoias). The times before full knowledge of God came in Jesus Christ. Paul uses the very word for their ignorance (agnoountes) employed in verse Acts 17:23. Overlooked (huperidôn). Second aorist active participle of huperoraô or hupereidô, old verb to see beyond, not to see, to overlook, not "to wink at" of the Authorized Version with the notion of condoning. Here only in the N.T. It occurs in the LXX in the sense of overlooking or neglecting (Ps 18:62; Ps 55:1). But it has here only a negative force. God has all the time objected to the polytheism of the heathen, and now he has made it plain. In Wisdom 11:23 we have these words: "Thou overlookest the sins of men to the end they may repent." But now (ta nun). Accusative of general reference, "as to the now things or situation." All is changed now that Christ has come with the full knowledge of God. See also Acts 27:22. All everywhere (pantas pantachou). No exceptions anywhere. Repent (metanoein). Present active infinitive of metanoëô in indirect command, a permanent command of perpetual force. See on metanoëô Acts 2:38 and the Synoptic Gospels. This word was the message of the Baptist, of Jesus, of Peter, of Paul, this radical change of attitude and life.

Verse 31

Inasmuch as (kathoti). According as (kata, hoti). Old causal conjunction, but in N.T. only used in Luke's writings (Luke 1:7; Luke 19:9; Acts 2:45; Acts 4:35; Acts 17:31). Hath appointed a day (estêsen hêmeran) First aorist active indicative of histêmi, to place, set. God did set the day in his counsel and he will fulfil it in his own time. Will judge (mellei krinein). Rather, is going to judge, mellô and the present active infinitive of krinô. Paul here quotes Ps

9:8 where krinei occurs. By the man whom he hath ordained (en andri hōi hōrisen). Here he adds to the Psalm the place and function of Jesus Christ, a passage in harmony with Christ's own words in Mat 25:1. Hōi (whom) is attracted from the accusative, object of hōrisen (first aorist active indicative of horizō) to the case of the antecedent andri. It has been said that Paul left the simple gospel in this address to the council of the Areopagus for philosophy. But did he? He skilfully caught their attention by reference to an altar to an Unknown God whom he interprets to be the Creator of all things and all men who overrules the whole world and who now commands repentance of all and has revealed his will about a day of reckoning when Jesus Christ will be Judge. He has preached the unity of God, the one and only God, has proclaimed repentance, a judgment day, Jesus as the Judge as shown by his Resurrection, great fundamental doctrines, and doubtless had much more to say when they interrupted his address. There is no room here for such a charge against Paul. He rose to a great occasion and made a masterful exposition of God's place and power in human history. Whereof he hath given assurance (pistin paraschōn). Second aorist active participle of parechō, old verb to furnish, used regularly by Demosthenes for bringing forward evidence. Note this old use of pistis as conviction or ground of confidence (Heb 11:1) like a note or title-deed, a conviction resting on solid basis of fact. All the other uses of pistis grow out of this one from peithō, to persuade. In that he hath raised him from the dead (anastêsas auton ek nekrôn). First aorist active participle of anistêmi, causal participle, but literally, "having raised him from the dead." This Paul knew to be a fact because he himself had seen the Risen Christ. Paul has here come to the heart of his message and could now throw light on their misapprehension about "Jesus and the Resurrection" (verse Acts 17:18). Here Paul has given the proof of all his claims in the address that seemed new and strange to them.

Verse 32

The resurrection of the dead (anastasin nekrôn). Rather, "a resurrection of dead men." No article with either word. The Greeks believed that the souls of men lived on, but they had no conception of resurrection of the body. They had listened with respect till Paul spoke of the actual resurrection of Jesus from the dead as a fact, when they did not care to hear more. Some mocked (hoi men echleuazon). Imperfect active of chleuazô, a common verb (from chleuê, jesting, mockery). Only here in the N.T. though late MSS. have it in Acts 2:13 (best MSS. diachleuazô). Probably inchoative here, began to mock. In contempt at Paul's statement they declined to listen further to "this babbling" (verse Acts 17:18) who had now lost what he had gained with this group of hearers (probably the light and flippant Epicureans). But others (hoi de). A more polite group like those who had invited him to speak (verse Acts 17:19). They were unconvinced, but had better manners and so were in favour of an adjournment. This was done, though it is not clear whether it was a serious postponement or a courteous refusal to hear Paul further (probably this). It was a virtual dismissal of the matter. " It is a sad story--the noblest of ancient cities and the noblest man of history--and he never cared to look on it again" (Furneaux).

Verse 33

Thus Paul went out from among them (houtôs ho Paulos exêlthen ek mesou autôn). No further questions, no effort to arrest him, no further ridicule. He walked out never to return to Athens. Had he failed?

Verse 34

Clave unto him and believed (kollêthentes autôi episteusan). First aorist passive of this strong word kollaô, to glue to, common in Acts (Acts 5:13; Acts 8:29; Acts 9:26; Acts 10:28) No sermon is a failure which leads a group of men (andres) to believe (ingressive aorist of pisteuô) in Jesus Christ. Many so-called great or grand sermons reap no such harvest. Dionysius the Areopagite (Dionusios ho Areopagitês). One of the judges of the Court of the Areopagus. That of itself was no small victory. He was one of this college of twelve judges who had helped to make Athens famous. Eusebius says that he became afterwards bishop of the Church at Athens and died a martyr. A woman named Damaris (gunê onomati Damaris). A woman by name Damaris. Not the wife of Dionysius as some have thought, but an aristocratic woman, not necessarily an educated courtesan as Furneaux holds. And there were "others" (heteroi) with them, a group strong enough to keep the fire burning in Athens. It is common to say that Paul in 1Co 2:1-5 alludes to his failure with philosophy in Athens when he failed to preach Christ crucified and he determined never to make that mistake again. On the other hand Paul determined to stick to the Cross of Christ in spite of the fact that the intellectual pride and superficial culture of Athens had prevented the largest success. As he faced Corinth with its veneer of culture and imitation of philosophy and sudden wealth he would go on with the same gospel of the Cross, the only gospel that Paul knew or preached. And it was a great thing to give the world a sermon like that preached in Athens.

Verse 1

To Corinth (eis Korinthon). Mummius had captured and destroyed Corinth B.C. 146. It was restored by Julius Caesar B.C. 46 as a boom town and made a colony. It was now the capital of the province of Achaia and the chief commercial city of Greece with a cosmopolitan population. It was only fifty miles from Athens. The summit of Acrocorinthus was 1,800 feet high and the ports of Cenchreae and Lechaeum and the Isthmus across which ships were hauled gave it command of the trade routes between Asia and Rome. The temple of Aphrodite on the Acrocorinthus had a thousand consecrated prostitutes and the very name to Corinthianize meant immorality. Not the Parthenon with Athene faced Paul in Corinth, but a worse situation. Naturally many Jews were in such a mart of trade. Philippi, Thessalonica, Beroea, Athens, all had brought anxiety to Paul. What could he expect in licentious Corinth?

Aquila (Akulan). Luke calls him a Jew from Pontus, apparently not yet a disciple, though there were Jews from Pontus at the great Pentecost who were converted (Acts 2:9). Aquila who made the famous A.D. translation of the O.T. was also from Pontus. Paul "found" (heurôn, second aorist active participle of heuriskô) though we do not know how. Edersheim says that a Jewish guild always kept together whether in street or synagogue so that by this bond they probably met. Lately come from Italy (prosphatôs elêluthota apo tês Italias). Second perfect participle of erchomai. Koin, adverb, here only in the N.T., from adjective prosphatos (pro, sphaô or sphazô, to kill), lately slaughtered and so fresh or recent (Heb 10:20). With his wife Priscilla (kai Priskillan gunaika autou). Diminutive of Priska (Rom 16:3; 1Co 16:19). Prisca is a name in the Acilian family and the Prisci was the name of another noble clan. Aquila may have been a freedman like many Jews in Rome. Her name comes before his in verses Acts 18:18, 26; Rom 16:3; 2Ti 4:9. Because Claudius had commanded (dia to diatetachenai Klaudion). Perfect active articular infinitive of diatassô, old verb to dispose, arrange, here with accusative of general reference. Dia here is causal sense, "because of the having ordered as to Claudius." This was about A.D. 49, done, Suetonius says (Claudius C. 25), because "the Jews were in a state of constant tumult at the instigation of one Chrestus" (probably among the Jews about Christ so pronounced). At any rate Jews were unpopular in Rome for Tiberius had deported 4,000 to Sardinia. There were 20,000 Jews in Rome. Probably mainly those implicated in the riots actually left.

Verse 3

Because he was of the same trade (dia to homotechnon einai). Same construction with dia as above. Homotechnon is an old word (homos, technê), though here alone in N.T. Rabbi Judah says: "He that teacheth not his son a trade, doth the same as if he taught him to be a thief." So it was easy for Paul to find a home with these "tentmakers by trade" (skênoipoiôi tēi technēi). Late word from skênê and poieô, here only in the N.T. They made portable tents of leather or of cloth of goat's hair. So Paul lived in this home with this noble man and his wife, all the more congenial if already Christians which they soon became at any rate. They worked as partners in the common trade. Paul worked for his support elsewhere, already in Thessalonica (1Th 2:9; 2Th 3:8) and later at Ephesus with Aquila and Priscilla (Acts 18:18, 26; Acts 20:34; 1Co 16:19). They moved again to Rome (Rom 16:3) and were evidently a couple of considerable wealth and generosity. It was a blessing to Paul to find himself with these people. So he "abode" (emenen, imperfect active) with them and "they wrought" (êrgazonto, imperfect middle), happy and busy during week days.

Verse 4

He reasoned (dielegeto). Imperfect middle, same form as in Acts 17:17 about Paul's work in Athens, here only on the Sabbaths. Persuaded (epeithen). Imperfect active, conative, he tried to persuade both Jews and Greeks (God-fearers who alone would come).

Verse 5

Was constrained by the word (suneicheto tôi logôi). This is undoubtedly the correct text and not tôi pneumati of the Textus Receptus, but suneicheto is in my opinion the direct middle imperfect indicative, not the imperfect passive as the translations have it (Robertson, Grammar, p. 808). Paul held himself together or completely to the preaching instead of just on Sabbaths in the synagogue (verse Acts 18:4). The coming of Silas and Timothy with the gifts from Macedonia (1Th 3:6; 2Co 11:9; Php 4:15) set Paul free from tent-making for a while so that he began to devote himself (inchoative imperfect) with fresh consecration to preaching. See the active in 2Co 5:14. He was now also assisted by Silas and Timothy (2Co 1:19). Testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ (diamarturomenos tois Ioudaiois einai ton Christon Iêsoun). Paul's witness everywhere (Acts 9:22; Acts 17:3). This verb diamarturomenos occurs in Acts 2:40 (which see) for Peter's earnest witness. Perhaps daily now in the synagogue he spoke to the Jews who came. Einai is the infinitive in indirect discourse (assertion) with the accusative of general reference. By ton Christon Paul means "the Messiah." His witness is to show to the Jews that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah.

Verse 6

When they opposed themselves (antitassomenôn autôn). Genitive absolute with present middle (direct middle again) of antitassô, old verb to range in battle array (tassô) face to face with or against (anti). In the N.T. only here and Rom 13:2; Jas 4:6; 1Pe 5:5. Paul's fresh activity roused the rabbis as at Antioch in Pisidia and at Thessalonica in concerted opposition and railing (blasphemy). He shook out his raiment (ektinaxamenos ta himatia). First aorist middle of ektinassô, old verb, in the N.T. only here as in Acts 13:51 (middle) and Mark 6:11; Mat 10:15 where active voice occurs of shaking out dust also. Vivid and dramatic picture here like that in Neh 5:13, "undoubtedly a very exasperating gesture" (Ramsay), but Paul was deeply stirred. Your blood be upon your own heads (To haima humôn epi tēn kephalēn humôn). As in Ezek 3:18; Ezek 33:4, 8; 2Sa 1:16. Not as a curse, but "a solemn disclaimer of responsibility" by Paul (Page) as in Acts 20:26. The Jews used this very phrase in assuming responsibility for the blood of Jesus (Mat 27:25). Cf. Mat 23:35. I am clean (katharos egô). Pure from your blood. Repeats the claim made in previous sentence. Paul had done his duty. From henceforth (apo tou nun). Turning point reached in Corinth. He will devote himself to the Gentiles, though Jews will be converted there also. Elsewhere as in Ephesus (Acts 19:1-10) and in Rome (Acts 28:23-28) Paul will preach also to Jews.

Verse 7

Titus Justus (Titou Ioustou). So Aleph E Vulgate, while B has Titiau Ioustou, while most MSS. have only Ioustou. Evidently a Roman citizen and not Titus, brother of Luke, of Gal 2:1. We had Barsabbas Justus (Acts 1:23) and Paul speaks of Jesus Justus (Col 4:11). The Titii were a famous family of potters in Corinth. This Roman was a God-fearer whose house "joined hard to the synagogue" (ên sunomoroussa tēi sunagôgēi). Periphrastic imperfect active of sunomoreô, a late (Byzantine) word, here only in the N.T., followed by the associative instrumental case, from sunomoros (sun, homoros from homos, joint, and horos, boundary) having joint boundaries, right next to. Whether Paul chose this location for his work because it was next to the synagogue, we do not know, but it caught the attendants at the synagogue worship. In Ephesus when Paul had to leave the synagogue he went to the school house of Tyrannus (Acts 19:9). The lines are being drawn between the Christians and the Jews, drawn by the Jews themselves.

Verse 8

Crispus (Krispos). Though a Jew and ruler of the synagogue (cf. Acts 13:15), he had a Latin name. Paul baptized him (1Co 1:14) himself, perhaps because of his prominence, apparently letting Silas and Timothy baptize most of the converts (1Co 1:14-17). Probably he followed Paul to the house of Titus Justus. It looked like ruin for the synagogue. With all his house (sun holôi tôi oikôi autou). Another household conversion, for Crispus "believed (episteusen) in the Lord with all his house." Hearing believed and were baptized (akouontes episteuon kai ebaptizonto). Present active participle and imperfect indicatives active and passive, expressing repetition for the "many" others who kept coming to the Lord in Corinth. It was a continual revival after Silas and Timothy came and a great church was gathered here during the nearly two years that Paul laboured in Corinth (possibly A.D. 51 and 52).

Verse 9

Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace (Mê phobou, alla lalei kai mê siôpêsêis). Literally, "stop being afraid (mê with present middle imperative of phobeô), but go on speaking (present active imperative of laleô) and do not become silent (mê and first aorist active of siôpaô, ingressive aorist)." Evidently there were signs of a gathering storm before this vision and message from the Lord Jesus came to Paul one night. Paul knew only too well what Jewish hatred could do as he had learned it at Damascus, Jerusalem, Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, Thessalonica, Beroea. He had clearly moments of doubt whether he had not better move on or become silent for a while in Corinth. Every pastor knows what it is to have such moods and moments. In 2Th 3:2 (written at this time) we catch Paul's dejection of spirits. He was like Elijah (1Ki 19:4) and Jeremiah (Jer 15:15).

Verse 10

Because I am with thee (dioti egô eimi meta sou). Jesus had given this promise to all believers (Mat 28:20) and here he renews it to Paul. This promise changes Paul's whole outlook. Jesus had spoken to Paul before, on the way to Damascus (Acts 9:4), in Jerusalem (Acts 22:17), in Troas (Acts 16:9), in great crises of his life. He will hear him again (Acts 23:11; Acts 27:23). Paul knows the voice of Jesus. No man shall set on thee to harm thee (oudeis epithêsetai soi tou kakôsai se). Future direct middle indicative of epitithêmi, old and common verb, here in direct middle to lay or throw oneself upon, to attack. Jesus kept that promise in Corinth for Paul. Tou kakôsai is genitive articular infinitive of purpose of kakoô, to do harm to. Paul would now face all the rabbis without fear. I have much people (laos estin moi polus). Dative of personal interest. "There is to me much people," not yet saved, but who will be if Paul holds on. There is the problem for every preacher and pastor, how to win the elect to Christ.

Verse 11

A year and six months (eniauton kai mênas hex). Accusative of extent of time. How much time before this incident he had been there we do not know. He was in Corinth probably a couple of years in all. His work extended beyond the city (2Co 11:10) and there was a church in Cenchreae (Rom 16:1).

Verse 12

When Gallio was proconsul of Achaia (Galliônos de anthupatou ontos tês Achaias). Genitive absolute of present participle ontos. Brother of Seneca the Stoic (Nero's tutor) and uncle of Lucan the author of the Pharsalia. His original name was M. Annaeus Novatus till he was adopted by Gallio the rhetorician. The family was Spanish. Gallio was a man of culture and refinement and may have been chosen proconsul of Achaia for this reason. Staius calls him "dulcis Gallio." Seneca says of him: Nemo enim mortalium uni tam dulcis quam hic omnibus (No one of mortals is so pleasant to one person as he is to all). Luke alone among writers says that he was proconsul, but Seneca speaks of his being in Achaia where he caught fever, a corroboration of Luke. But now a whitish grey limestone inscription from the Hagios Elias quarries near Delphi (a letter of Claudius to Delphi) has been found which definitely names Gallio as proconsul of Achaia (authupatos tês Achaias). The province of Achaia after various shifts (first senatorial, then imperial) back and forth with Macedonia, in A.D. 44 Claudius gave back to the Senate with proconsul as the title of the governor. It is amazing how Luke is confirmed whenever a new discovery is made. The discovery of this inscription has thrown light also on the date of Paul's work in Corinth as it says that Gallio came in the 26th acclamation of Claudius as Emperor in A.D. 51, that would definitely fix the time of Paul in Corinth as A.D. 50 and 51 (or 51 and 52). Deissmann has a full and able discussion of the whole matter in Appendix I to his St. Paul. Rose up (katepestêsan). Second aorist active of kat-ephistêmi, intransitive, to take a stand against, a double compound verb found nowhere else. They took a stand (estêsan) against (kata, down on, epi, upon), they made a dash or rush at Paul as if they would stand it no longer. Before the judgment seat (epi to bêma). See on Acts 12:21. The proconsul was sitting in the basilica in the forum or agora. The Jews had probably heard of his reputation for moderation and sought to make an impression as they had on the praetors of Philippi by their rush (sunepestê, Acts 16:22). The new proconsul was a good chance also (Acts 25:2). So for the second time Paul faces a Roman proconsul (Sergius Paulus, Acts 13:7) though under very different circumstances.

Verse 13

Contrary to the law (para ton nomon). They did not accuse Paul of treason as in Thessalonica, perhaps Paul had been more careful in his language here. They bring the same charge here that the owners of the slave-girl brought in Philippi (Acts 16:21) Perhaps they fear to go too far with Gallio, for they are dealing with a Roman proconsul, not with the politarchs of Thessalonica. The Jewish religion was a religio licita and they were allowed to make proselytes, but not among Roman citizens. To prove that Paul was acting contrary to Roman law (for Jewish law had no standing with Gallio though the phrase has a double meaning) these Jews had to show that Paul was making converts in ways that violated the Roman regulations on that subject. The accusation as made did not show it nor did they produce any evidence to do it. The verb used anapeitheî means to stir up by persuasion (old verb here only in the N.T.), a thing that he had a right to do.

Verse 14

When Paul was about to open his mouth (mellontos tou Paulou anoigein to stoma). Genitive absolute again. Before Paul could speak, Gallio cut in and ended the whole matter. According to their own statement Paul needed no defence. Wrong (adikêma). Injuria. Old word, a wrong done one. In N.T. only here, Acts 24:20; Rev 18:5. Here it may mean a legal wrong to the state. Wicked villainy (rhâidiourgêma). A crime, act of a criminal, from rhâidiourgos (rhâidios, easy, ergon, work), one who does a thing with ease, adroitly, a "slick citizen." Reason would that I should bear with you (kata logon an aneschomên humôn). Literally, "according to reason I should have put up with you (or held myself back from you)." This condition is the second class (determined as unfulfilled) and means that the Jews had no case against Paul in a Roman court. The verb in the conclusion (aneschomên) is second aorist middle indicative and means with the ablative humôn "I should have held myself back (direct middle) from you (ablative). The use of an makes the form of the condition plain.

Verse 15

Questions (zêtêmata). Plural, contemptuous, "a parcel of questions" (Knowling). About words (peri logou). Word, singular, talk, not deed or fact (ergon, factum). And names (kai onomatôn). As to whether "Jesus" should also be called "Christ" or "Messiah." The Jews, Gallio knew, split hairs over words and names. And your own law (kai nomou tou kath' humâs) Literally, "And law that according to you." Gallio had not been caught in the trap set for him. What they had said concerned Jewish law, not Roman law at all. Look to it yourselves (opsesthe autoi). The volitive future middle indicative of horaô often used (cf. Mat 27:4) where an imperative could be employed (Robertson, Grammar, p. 874). The use of autoi (yourselves) turns it all over to them. I am not minded (ou boulomai). I am not willing, I do not wish. An absolute refusal to allow a religious question to be brought before a Roman civil court. This decision of Gallio does not establish Christianity in preference to Judaism. It simply means that the case was plainly that Christianity was a form of Judaism and as such was not opposed to Roman law. This decision opened the door for Paul's preaching all over the Roman Empire. Later Paul himself argues (Rom 9:1-11:36) that in fact Christianity is the true, the spiritual Judaism.

Verse 16

He drave them (apêlasen autous). First aorist active indicative of apelaunô, old word, but here alone in the N.T. The Jews were stunned by this sudden blow from the mild proconsul and wanted to linger to argue the case further, but they had to go.

Verse 17

They all laid hold on Sosthenes (epilabomenoi pantes Sôsthenên). See Acts 16:19; Acts 17:19 for the same form. Here is violent hostile reaction against their leader who had failed so miserably. Beat him (etupton). Inchoative imperfect active, began to beat him, even if they could not beat Paul. Sosthenes succeeded Crispus (verse Acts 18:8) when he went over to Paul. The beating did Sosthenes good for he too finally is a Christian (1Co 1:1), a co-worker with Paul whom he had sought to persecute. And Gallio cared for none of these things (kai ouden toutôn tôi Galliôni emelen). Literally, "no one of these things was a care to Gallio." The usually impersonal verb (melei, emelen, imperfect active) here has the nominative as in Luke 10:40. These words have been often misunderstood as a description of Gallio's lack of interest in Christianity, a religious indifferentist. But that is quite beside the mark. Gallio looked the other way with a blind eye while Sosthenes got the beating which he richly deserved. That was a small detail for the police court, not for the proconsul's concern. Gallio shows up well in Luke's narrative as a clear headed judge who would not be led astray by Jewish subterfuges and with the courage to dismiss a mob.

Verse 18

Having tarried after this yet many days (eti prosmeinas hêmeras hikanas). First aorist (constative) active participle of prosmenô, old verb, to remain besides (pros as in 1Ti 1:3) and that idea is expressed also in eti (yet). The accusative is extent of time. On Luke's frequent use of hikanos see Acts 8:11. It is not certain that this period of "considerable days" which followed the trial before Gallio is included in the year and six months of verse Acts 18:11 or is in addition to it which is most likely. Vindicated as Paul was, there was no reason for haste in leaving, though he usually left after such a crisis was passed. Took his leave (apotaxamenos). First aorist middle (direct), old verb, to separate oneself, to bid farewell (Vulgate valefacio), as in verse Acts 18:21; Mark 6:46. Sailed thence (explei). Imperfect active of ekpleô, old and common verb, inchoative imperfect, started to sail. Only Priscilla and Aquila are mentioned as his companions though others may have been in the party. Having shorn his head (keiramenos tèn kephalên). First aorist middle (causative) of keirô, old verb to shear (sheep) and the hair as also in 1Co 11:6. The participle is masculine and so cannot refer to Priscilla. Aquila comes next to the participle, but since mention of Priscilla and Aquila is parenthetical and the two other participles (prosmeinas, apotaxamenos) refer to Paul it seems clear that this one does also. For he had a vow (eichen gar euchên). Imperfect active showing the continuance of the vow up till this time in Cenchreae, the port of Corinth when it expired. It was not a Nazarite vow which could be absolved only in Jerusalem. It is possible that the hair was only polled or trimmed, cut shorter, not "shaved" (xuraô as in Acts 21:24) for there is a distinction as both verbs are contrasted in 1Co 11:6 (keirâsthai ê xurâsthai). It is not clear what sort of a vow Paul had taken nor why he took it. It may have been a thank offering for the outcome at Corinth (Hackett). Paul as a Jew kept up his observance of the ceremonial law, but refused to impose it on the Gentiles.

Verse 19

Came (katêntêsan). Came down, as usual in speaking of coming to land (Acts 16:1). To Ephesus (eis Epheson). This great city on the Cayster, the capital of the Province of Asia, the home of the worship of Diana (Artemis) with a wonderful temple, Paul at last had reached, though forbidden to come on the way out on this tour (Acts 16:6). Here Paul will spend three years after his return from Jerusalem. He left them there (kakeinous katelipen autou). That is, Priscilla and Aquila he left (second aorist active indicative) here (autou). But Luke mentions the departure by way of anticipation before he actually went away (verse Acts 18:21). But he himself (autos de). Paul again the leading person in the narrative. On this occasion he may have gone alone into the synagogue. He reasoned (dielexato). Luke's favourite word for Paul's synagogue discourses (Acts 17:2, 17; Acts 18:4 which see) as also Acts 19:8, 9.

Verse 20

When they asked him (erôtontôn autôn). Genitive absolute of present participle of erôtaô, old verb to ask a question, common in Koin, to make a request as here. He consented not (ouk epeneusen). First aorist active indicative of epineuô, old verb to express approval by a nod, only here in the N.T.

Verse 21

I shall return (anakampsô). Future active indicative of anakamptô, old verb to bend back, turn back (Mat 2:2). If God will (tou theou thelontos). Genitive absolute of present active participle. This expression (ean with subjunctive) occurs also in 1Co 4:19; 1Co 16:7; Jas 4:15. Such phrases were common among Jews, Greeks, and Romans, and are today. It is simply a recognition that we are in God's hands. The Textus Receptus has here a sentence not in the best MSS.: "I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem." This addition by D and other documents may have been due to a desire to give a reason for the language in verse Acts 18:22 about "going up" to Jerusalem. Whether Paul said it or not, it was in the spring when he made this journey with a company of pilgrims probably going to the feast of Pentecost in Jerusalem. We know that later Paul did try to reach Jerusalem for Pentecost (Acts 20:16) and succeeded. As the ship was leaving, Paul had to go, but with the hope of returning soon to Ephesus as he did.

Verse 22

He went up and saluted the church (anabas kai aspasamenos tēn ekklēsiān). The language could refer to the church in Caesarea where Paul had just landed, except for several things. The going up (anabas, second aorist active participle of anabainô) is the common way of speaking of going to Jerusalem which was up from every direction save from Hebron. It was the capital of Palestine as people in England today speaking of going up to London. Besides "he went down to Antioch" (katebê eis Antiocheian, second aorist active indicative of katabainô) which language suits better leaving Jerusalem than Caesarea. Moreover, there was no special reason for this trip to Caesarea, but to Jerusalem it was different. Here Paul saluted the church in the fourth of his five visits after his conversion (Acts 9:26; Acts 11:30; Acts 15:4; Acts 18:22; Acts 21:17). The apostles may or may not have been in the city, but Paul had friends in Jerusalem now. Apparently he did not tarry long, but returned to Antioch to make a report of his second mission tour as he had done at the close of the first when he and Barnabas came back (Acts 14:26-28). He had started on this tour with Silas and had picked up Timothy and Luke, but came back alone. He had a great story to tell.

Verse 23

Having spent some time (poiêsas chronon tina). Literally, having done some time. How long we do not know, probably not long. There are those who place the visit of Peter here to which Paul alludes in Gal 2:11 and which we have located while Paul was here the last time (Acts 15:35). He departed (exêlthen). Thus simply and alone Paul began the third mission tour without a Barnabas or a Silas. Went through (dierchomenos). Present middle participle, going through. The region of Galatia and Phrygia (ten Galatikên chôran kai Phrygian). See on Acts 16:6 for discussion of this phrase, here in reverse order, passing through the Galatic region and then Phrygia. Does Luke mean Lycaonia (Derbe and Lystra) and Phrygia (Iconium and Pisidian Antioch)? Or does he mean the route west through the old Galatia and the old Phrygia on west into Asia? The same conflict exists here over the South Galatian and the North Galatian theories. Phrygia is apparently distinguished from the Galatic region here. It is apparently A.D. 52 when Paul set out on this tour. In order (kathexês). In succession as in Acts 11:4, though the names of the cities are not given. Stablishing (stêrizôn). As he did in the second tour (Acts 15:41, epistêrizôn, compound of this same verb) which see.

Verse 24

Apollos (Apollōs). Genitive -ō Attic second declension. Probably a contraction of Apollonios as D has it here. An Alexandrian (Alexandreus). Alexander the Great founded this city B.C. 332 and placed a colony of Jews there which flourished greatly, one-third of the population at this time. There was a great university and library there. The Jewish-Alexandrian philosophy developed here of which Philo was the chief exponent who was still living. Apollo was undoubtedly a man of the schools and a man of parts. A learned man (anēr logios). Or eloquent, as the word can mean either a man of words (like one "wordy," verbose) or a man of ideas, since logos was used either for reason or speech. Apollo was doubtless both learned (mighty in the Scriptures) and eloquent, though eloquence varies greatly in people's ideas. Mighty in the Scriptures (dunatos ōn en tais graphais). Being powerful (dunatos verbal of dunamai and same root as dunamis, dynamite, dynamo) in the Scriptures (in the knowledge and the use of the Scriptures), as should be true of every preacher. There is no excuse for ignorance of the Scriptures on the part of preachers, the professed interpreters of the word of God. The last lecture made to the New Testament English class in Southern Baptist Theological Seminary by John A. Broadus was on this passage with a plea for his students to be mighty in the Scriptures. In Alexandria Clement of Alexandria and Origen taught in the Christian theological school.

Verse 25

Had been instructed in the way of the Lord (ēn katêchēmenos tēn hodon tou kuriou). Periphrastic past perfect passive of katêcheō, rare in the old Greek and not in the LXX from kata and êcheō (êchō, sound) as in Luke 1:4, to re-sound, to re-echo, to teach by repeated dinning into the ears as the Arabs do now, to teach orally by word of mouth (and ear). Here the accusative of the thing (the word) is retained in the passive like with didaskō, to teach (Robertson, Grammar, p. 485). Being fervent in spirit (zeôn tōi pneumati). Boiling (from zeō, to boil, old and common verb, in N.T. only here and Rom 12:11) like boiling water or yeast. The Latin verb ferveo means to boil or ferment. Locative case after it. Taught carefully (edidasken akribōs). Imperfect active, was teaching or inchoative, began teaching, accurately. He taught accurately what he knew, a fine gift for any preacher. Only the baptism of John (monon to baptisma Iôanou). It was a baptism of repentance (marked by repentance) as Paul said (Acts 13:24; Acts 19:4), as Peter said (Acts 2:38) and as the Gospels tell (Mark 1:4, etc.). That is to say, Apollos knew only what the Baptist knew when he died, but John had preached the coming of the Messiah, had baptized him, had identified him as the Son of God, had proclaimed the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but had not seen the Cross, the Resurrection of Jesus, nor the great Day of Pentecost.

Verse 26

They took him unto them (proselabonto). Second aorist middle (indirect) indicative of proslambanô, old verb, to their home and heart as companion (cf. the rabbis and the ruffians in Acts 17:5). Probably for dinner after service. Expounded (exethento). Second aorist (effective) middle indicative of ektithêmi seen already in Acts 11:4, to set forth. More carefully (akribesteron). Comparative adverb of akribôs. More accurately than he already knew. Instead of abusing the young and brilliant preacher for his ignorance they (particularly Priscilla) gave him the fuller story of the life and work of Jesus and of the apostolic period to fill up the gaps in his knowledge. It is a needed and delicate task, this thing of teaching gifted young ministers. They do not learn it all in schools. More of it comes from contact with men and women rich in grace and in the knowledge of God's ways. He was not rebaptized, but only received fuller information.

Verse 27

Encouraged him (protrepamenoi). First aorist middle participle of protrepô, old verb, to urge forward, to push on, only here in the N.T. Since Apollos wanted (boulomenou autou, genitive absolute) to go into Achaia, the brethren (including others besides Priscilla and Aquila) wrote (egrapsan) a letter of introduction to the disciples in Corinth to receive him (apodexasthai auton), a nice letter of recommendation and a sincere one also. But Paul will refer to this very letter later (2Co 3:1) and observe that he himself needed no such letter of commendation. The Codex Bezae adds here that certain Corinthians who had come to Ephesus heard Apollos and begged him to cross over with them to Corinth. This may very well be the way that Apollos was led to go. Preachers often receive calls because visitors from other places hear them. Priscilla and Aquila were well known in Corinth and their approval would carry weight. But they did not urge Apollos to stay longer in Ephesus. Helped them much (sunebaletō polu). Second aorist middle indicative of sunballō used in Acts 17:18 for "dispute," old verb to throw together, in the N.T. always in the active save here in the middle (common in Greek writers) to put together, to help. Through grace (dia tēs charitos). This makes sense if taken with "believed," as Hackett does (cf. Acts 13:48; Acts 16:14) or with "helped" (1Co 3:10; 1Co 15:10; 2Co 1:12). Both are true as the references show.

Verse 28

Powerfully (eutonōs). Adverb from eunos (eu, well, teinō, to stretch), well-strung, at full stretch. Confuted (diakatēlegcheto). Imperfect middle of the double compound verb dia-kat-elegchomai, to confute with rivalry in a contest, here alone. The old Greek has dielegchō, to convict of falsehood, but not this double compound which means to argue down to a finish. It is the imperfect tense and does not mean that Apollos convinced these rabbis, but he had the last word. Publicly (dēmosiāi). See Acts 5:18; Acts 16:37. In open meeting where all could see the victory of Apollos. Shewing (epideiknūs). Present active participle of epideiknumi, old verb to set forth so that all see. By the Scriptures (dia tōn graphōn). In which Apollos was so "mighty" (verse Acts 18:24) and the rabbis so weak for they knew the oral law better than the written (Mark 7:8-12). That Jesus was the Christ (einai ton Christon Iēsoun). Infinitive and the accusative in indirect assertion. Apollos proclaims the same message that Paul did everywhere (Acts 17:3). He had not yet met Paul, but he had been instructed by Priscilla and Aquila. He is in Corinth building on the foundation laid so well by Paul (1Co 3:4-17). Luke has here made a brief digression from the story of Paul, but it helps us understand Paul better. There are those who think that Apollos wrote Hebrews, a guess that may be correct.

While Apollos was at Corinth (en tōi ton Apollō einai en Korinthōi). Favourite idiom with Luke, en with the locative of the articular infinitive and the accusative of general reference (Luke 1:8; Luke 2:27, etc.). Having passed through the upper country (dielthonta ta anōterika merē). Second aorist active participle of dierchomai, accusative case agreeing with Paulon, accusative of general reference with the infinitive elthein, idiomatic construction with egeneto. The word for "upper" (anōterika) is a late form for anōtera (Luke 14:10) and occurs in Hippocrates and Galen. It refers to the highlands (cf. Xenophon's Anabasis) and means that Paul did not travel the usual Roman road west by Colossae and Laodicea in the Lycus Valley, cities that he did not visit (Col 2:1). Instead he took the more direct road through the Cayster Valley to Ephesus. Codex Bezae says here that Paul wanted to go back to Jerusalem, but that the Holy Spirit bade him to go into Asia where he had been forbidden to go in the second tour (Acts 16:6). Whether the upper "parts" (merē) here points to North Galatia is still a point of dispute among scholars. So he came again to Ephesus as he had promised to do (Acts 18:21). The province of Asia included the western part of Asia Minor. The Romans took this country B.C. 130. Finally the name was extended to the whole continent. It was a jewel in the Roman empire along with Africa and was a senatorial province. It was full of great cities like Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, Laodicea (the seven churches of Rev 2; Rev 3), Colossae, Hierapolis, Apamea, to go no further. Hellenism had full sway here. Ephesus was the capital and chief city and was a richer and larger city than Corinth. It was located at the entrance to the valley of the Maeander to the east. Here was the power of Rome and the splendour of Greek culture and the full tide of oriental superstition and magic. The Temple of Artemis was one of the seven wonders of the world. While in Ephesus some hold that Paul at this time wrote the Epistle to the Galatians after his recent visit there, some that he did it before his recent visit to Jerusalem. But it is still possible that he wrote it from Corinth just before writing to Rome, a point to discuss later. Certain disciples (tinias mathētas). Who were they? Apollos had already gone to Corinth. They show no connection with Priscilla and Aquila. Luke calls them "disciples" or "learners" (mathētas) because they were evidently sincere though crude and ignorant. There is no reason at all for connecting these uninformed disciples of the Baptist with Apollos. They were floating followers of the Baptist who drifted into Ephesus and whom Paul found. Some of John's disciples clung to him till his death (John 3:22-25; Luke 7:19; Mat 14:12). Some of them left Palestine without the further knowledge of Jesus that came after his death and some did not even know that, as turned out to be the case with the group in Ephesus.

Verse 2

Did ye receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed? (ei pneuma hagion elabete pisteusantes?). This use of Pi in a direct question occurs in Acts 1:6, is not according to the old Greek idiom, but is common in the LXX and the N.T. as in Luke 13:23 which see (Robertson, Grammar, p. 916). Apparently Paul was suspicious of the looks or conduct of these professed disciples. The first aorist active participle pisteusantes is simultaneous with the second aorist active indicative elabete and refers to the same event. Nay, we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Spirit was (All' oude ei pneuma hagion estin êkousamen). The reply of these ignorant disciples is amazing. They probably refer to the time of their baptism and mean that, when baptized, they did not hear whether (ei in indirect question) the Holy Spirit was (estin retained as in John 7:39). Plain proof that they knew John's message poorly.

Verse 3

Into what (eis ti). More properly, Unto what or on what basis (Robertson, Grammar, p. 592). Clearly, Paul felt they had received a poor baptism with no knowledge of the Holy Spirit. John's baptism (to Iôanou baptisma). Last mention of John the Baptist in the N.T. They had been dipped in other words, but they had not grasped the significance of the ordinance.

Verse 4

With the baptism of repentance (baptisma metanoias). Cognate accusative with ebaptisen and the genitive metanoias describing the baptism as marked by (case of species or genus), not as conveying, repentance just as in Mark 1:4 and that was the work of the Holy Spirit. But John preached also the baptism of the Holy Spirit which the Messiah was to bring (Mark 1:7; Mat 3:11; Luke 3:16). If they did not know of the Holy Spirit, they had missed the point of John's baptism. That they should believe on him that should come after him, that is on Jesus (eis ton erchomenon met' auton hina pisteusôsin, tout' estin eis ton Iêsou). Note the emphatic prolepsis of eis ton erchomenon met' auton before hina pisteusôsin with which it is construed. This is John's identical phrase, "the one coming after me" as seen in Mark 1:7; Mat 3:11; Luke 3:16; John 1:15. It is not clear that these "disciples" believed in a Messiah, least of all in Jesus. They were wholly unprepared for the baptism of John. Paul does not mean to say that John's baptism was inadequate, but he simply explains what John really taught and so what his baptism signified.

Verse 5

The name of the Lord Jesus (to onoma ton kuriou Iêsou). Apollos was not rebaptized. The twelve apostles were not rebaptized. Jesus received no other baptism than that of John. The point here is simply that these twelve men were grossly ignorant of the meaning of John's baptism as regards repentance, the Messiahship of Jesus, the Holy Spirit. Hence Paul had them baptized, not so much again, as really baptized this time, in the name or on the authority of the Lord Jesus as he had himself commanded (Mat 28:19) and as was the universal apostolic custom. Proper understanding of "Jesus" involved all the rest including the Trinity (Father, Son, and Holy Spirit). Luke does not give a formula, but simply explains that now these men had a proper object of faith (Jesus) and were now really baptized.

Verse 6

When Paul had laid his hands upon them (epithentos autois tou Paulou cheiras). Genitive absolute of second aorist active participle of epitithêmi. This act of laying on of the hands was done in Samaria by Peter and John (Acts 8:16) and in Damascus in the case of Paul (Acts 9:17) and was followed as here by the descent of the Holy Spirit in supernatural power. They spake with tongues (elaloun glôssais). Inchoative imperfect, began to speak with tongues as in Jerusalem at Pentecost and as in Caesarea before the baptism. Propheied (eprophêteuon). Inchoative imperfect again, began to prophesy. The speaking with tongues and prophesying was external and indubitable proof that the Holy Spirit had come on these twelve uninformed disciples now fully won to the service of Jesus as Messiah. But this baptism in water did not "convey" the Holy Spirit nor forgiveness of sins. Paul was not a sacramentalist.

Verse 8

Spake boldly (eparrêsiazeto). Imperfect middle, kept on at it for three months. Cf. same word in Acts 18:26. Persuading (peithôn). Present active conative participle of peithô, trying to persuade (Acts 28:23). Paul's idea of the Kingdom of God was the church of God which he (Jesus, God's Son) had purchased with his own blood (Acts 20:28, calling Christ God). Nowhere else had Paul apparently been able to speak so long in the synagogue without interruption unless it was so at Corinth. These Jews were already interested (18:30).

Verse 9

But when some were hardened (hôs de tines esklêrunonto). Imperfect passive of sklêrunô, causative like hiphil in Hebrew, to make hard (sklêros) or rough or harsh (Mat 25:24). In LXX and Hippocrates and Galen (in medical writings). In N.T. only here and Rom 9:18 and 4 times in Heb 3:8, 13, 15; Heb 4:7, 8 quoting and referring to Ps 95:8 about hardening the heart like a gristle. The inevitable reaction against Paul went on even in Ephesus though slowly. Disobedient (epeithoun). Imperfect again, showing the growing disbelief and disobedience (apeithês), both ideas as in Acts 14:2; Acts 17:5, first refusal to believe and then refusal to obey. Both sklêrunô and apeitheô occur together, as here, in Eccles. 30:12. Speaking evil of the Way (kakologountes tèn hodon). Late verb from kakologos (speaker of evil) for the old kakôs legô. Already in Mark 7:10; Mark 9:39; Mat 15:4. Now these Jews are aggressive opponents of Paul and seek to injure his influence with the crowd. Note "the Way" as in Acts 9:2 for Christianity. He departed from them (apostas ap' autôn). Second aorist active participle of aphistêmi, made an "apostasy" (standing off, cleavage) as he did at Corinth (Acts 18:7, metabas, making a change). Separated the disciples (aphôrisen tous mathêtas). First aorist active indicative of aphorizô, old verb to mark limits (horizon) as already in Acts 13:2. Paul himself was a spiritual Pharisee "separated" to Christ (Rom 1:1). The Jews regarded this withdrawal as apostasy, like separating the sheep from the goats (Mat 25:32). Paul now made a separate church as he had done at Thessalonica and Corinth. In the school of Tyrannus (en têi scholêi Turannou). Scholê (our school) is an old word from schein (echô) to hold on, leisure and then in later Greek (Plutarch, etc.) a place where there is leisure as here. Only this example in the N.T. This is the Greek notion of "school," the Jewish being that of "yoke" as in Mat 11:29. The name Tyrannus (our tyrant) is a common one. It is an inscription in the Columbarium of the Empress Livia as that of a physician in the court. Furneaux suggests the possibility that a relative of this physician was lecturing on medicine in Ephesus and so as a friend of Luke, the physician, would be glad to help Paul about a place to preach. It was probably a public building or lecture hall with this name whether hired by Paul or loaned to him. The pagan sophists often spoke in such halls. The Codex Bezae adds "from the fifth hour to the tenth" as the time allotted Paul for his work in this hall, which is quite possible, from just before midday till the close of the afternoon (from before the noon meal till two hours before sunset) each day. Here Paul had great freedom and a great hearing. As the church grows there will be other places of meeting as the church in the house of Aquila and Priscilla (1Co 16:19).

Verse 10

For two years (epi etê duo). Note epi with accusative for extent of time as in verse Acts 19:8, epi mênas treis and often. But in Acts 20:31 Paul said to the Ephesian elders at Miletus that he laboured with them for the space of "three years." That may be a general expression and there was probably a longer period after the "two years" in the school of Tyrannus besides the six months in the synagogue. Paul may have preached thereafter in the house of Aquila and Priscilla for some months, the "for a while" of verse Acts 19:22. So that all they which dwelt in Asia heard (hôte pantas tous katoikountas tēn Asian akousai). Actual result with hōste and the infinitive with accusative of general reference as is common (also verse Acts 19:11) in the Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 999f.). Paul apparently remained in Ephesus, but the gospel spread all over the province even to the Lycus Valley including the rest of the seven churches of Rev 1:11; Rev 2:1; Rev 3:1. Demetrius in verse Acts 19:26 will confirm the tremendous influence of Paul's ministry in Ephesus on Asia. Forty years after this Pliny in his famous letter to Trajan from Bithynia will say of Christianity: "For the contagion of this superstition has not only spread through cities, but also through villages and country places." It was during these years in Ephesus that Paul was greatly disturbed over the troubles in the Corinthian Church. He apparently wrote a letter to them now lost to us (1Co 5:9), received messages from the household of Chloe, a letter from the church, special messengers, sent Timothy, then Titus, may have made a hurried trip himself, wrote our First Corinthians, was planning to go after the return of Titus to Troas where he was to meet him after Pentecost, when all of a sudden the uproar raised by Demetrius hurried Paul away sooner than he had planned. Meanwhile Apollos had returned from Corinth to Ephesus and refused to go back (1Co 16:12). Paul doubtless had helpers like Epaphras and Philemon who carried the message over the province of Asia, Tychicus, and Trophimus of Asia who were with him on the last visit to Jerusalem (verses Acts 19:22, 29; Acts 20:4). Paul's message reached Greeks, not merely Hellenists and God-fearers, but some of the Greeks in the upper circles of life in Ephesus.

Verse 11

Special miracles (dunameis ou tas tuchousas). "Powers not the ones that happen by chance," "not the ordinary ones," litotes for "the extraordinary." All "miracles" or "powers" (dunameis) are supernatural and out of the ordinary, but here God regularly wrought (epoiei), imperfect active) wonders beyond those familiar to the disciples and completely different from the deeds of the Jewish exorcists. This phrase is peculiar to Luke in the N.T. (also Acts 28:2), but it occurs in the classical Greek and in the Koin, as in III Macc. 3:7 and in papyri and inscriptions (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 255). In Samaria Philip wrought miracles to deliver the people from the influence of Simon Magus. Here in Ephesus exorcists and other magicians had built an enormous vogue of a false spiritualism and Paul faces unseen forces of evil. His tremendous success led some people to superstitious practices thinking that there was power in Paul's person.

Verse 12

Handkerchiefs (soudaria). Latin word for sudor (sweat). Used in Luke 19:20; John 11:44; John 20:7. In two papyri marriage-contracts this word occurs among the toilet articles in the dowry (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 223). Aprons (simikinthia). Latin word also, semicinctilum (semi, cingo). Only here in the N.T. Linen aprons used by servants or artisans (Martial XIV. 153). Paul did manual work at Ephesus (Acts 20:34) and so wore these aprons. Departed (apallalsethai). Present passive infinitive with hôte for actual result as in verse Acts 19:10. If one wonders how God could honour such superstitious faith, he should remember that there is no power in superstition or in magic, but in God. If God never honoured any faith save that entirely free from superstition, how about Christian people who are troubled over the number 13, over the moon, the rabbit's foot? The poor woman with an issue of blood touched the hem of Christ's garment and was healed (Luke 8:44-46) as others sought to do (Mat 14:36). God condescends to meet us in our ignorance and weakness where he can reach us. Elisha had a notion that some of the power of Elijah resided in his mantle (2Ki 2:13). Some even sought help from Peter's shadow (Acts 5:15).

Verse 13

Of the strolling Jews, exorcists (tôn perierchomenôn Ioudaiôn exorkistôn). These exorcists travelled around (peri) from place to place like modern Gypsy fortune-tellers. The Jews were especially addicted to such practices with spells of sorcery connected with the name of Solomon (Josephus, Ant. VIII. 2.5). See also Tobit 8:1-3. Jesus alludes to those in Palestine (Mat 12:27; Luke 11:19). The exorcists were originally those who administered an oath (from exorkizô, to exact an oath), then to use an oath as a spell or charm. Only instance here in the N.T. These men regarded Paul as one of their own number just as Simon Magus treated Simon Peter. Only here these exorcists paid Paul the compliment of imitation instead of offering money as Magus did. To name over (onomazein epi). They heard what Paul said and treated his words as a magic charm or spell to drive the evil spirits out. I adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth (Horkizô humas ton Iêsoun hon Paulos kêrussei). Note two accusatives with the verb of swearing (cf. Mark 5:7) as a causative verb (Robertson, Grammar, p. 483). The papyri furnish numerous instances of horkizô in such constructions (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 281). Note also the article with Jesus, "the Jesus," as if to identify the magic word to the demons with the addition "whom Paul preaches." They thought that success turned on the correct use of the magical formula. The Ephesian mysteries included Christianity, so they supposed.

Verse 14

Seven sons of Sceva (Skeuâ hepta huioi). Who this Sceva was we do not know. If a high priest, he was highly connected in Jerusalem (cf. Acts 5:24). Some MSS. have ruler instead of priest. His name may be Latin in origin. Skeuâ has Doric form of genitive. But that he had seven sons in this degraded business shows how Judaism had fared poorly in this superstitious city. Did they imagine there was special power in the number seven?

Verse 15

Jesus I know (ton Iêsoun ginôskô). "The (whom you mention) Jesus I recognize (ginôskô)" and "the (whom you mentioned) Paul I am acquainted with (ton Paulon epistamai)." Clear distinction between ginôskô and epistamai. But who are ye? (humeis de tines este?). But you, who are you? Emphatic prolepsis.

Verse 16

Leaped on them (ephalomenos ep' autous). Second aorist (ingressive) middle participle of ephallomai, old verb to spring upon like a panther, here only in the N.T. Mastered (katakurieusas). First aorist (effective) active participle of katakurieuô, late verb from kata and kurios, to become lord or master of. Both (amphoterôn). Papyri examples exist where amphoterai means "all" or more than "two" (Robertson, Grammar, p. 745). So here amphoterōi includes all seven. "Both" in old English was used for more than two. So that (hōste). Another example (verses Acts 19:10, 11) of hōste with the infinitive for result. Naked (gumnous). Probably with torn garments, Wounded (tetraumatismenous). Perfect passive participle of traumatizō, old verb to wound, from trauma (a wound). In the N.T. only here and Luke 20:12.

Verse 17

Was magnified (emegaluneto). Imperfect passive. To make great. It was a notable victory over the powers of evil in Ephesus.

Verse 18

Came (ērchonto). Imperfect middle, kept coming, one after another. Even some of the believers were secretly under the spell of these false spiritualists just as some Christians today cherish private contacts with so-called occult powers through mediums, seances, of which they are ashamed. Confessing (exomologoumenoi). It was time to make a clean breast of it all, to turn on the light, to unbosom their secret habits. Declaring their deeds (anagellontes tas praxeis autōn). Judgment was beginning at the house of God. The dupes (professing believers, alas) of these jugglers or exorcists now had their eyes opened when they saw the utter defeat of the tricksters who had tried to use the name of Jesus without his power. The boomerang was tremendous. The black arts were now laid bare in their real character. Gentile converts had a struggle to shake off their corrupt environment.

Verse 19

Not a few of them that practised curious arts (hikanōi tōn ta periērga praxantōn). Considerable number of the performers or exorcists themselves who knew that they were humbugs were led to renounce their evil practices. The word periērga (curious) is an old word (peri, erga) originally a piddler about trifles, a busybody (1Ti 5:13), then impertinent and magical things as here. Only two examples in the N.T. It is a technical term for magic as the papyri and inscriptions show. Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 323) thinks that these books here burned were just like the Magic Papyri now recovered from Egypt. Burned them in the sight of all (katekaion enôpion pantôn). Imperfect active of katakaiô. It probably took a good while to do it, burned them completely (up, we say; down, the Greeks say, perfective use of kata). These Magical Papyri or slips of parchment with symbols or magical sentences written on them called Ephesia Grammata (Ephesian Letters). These Ephesian Letters were worn as amulets or charms. They brought them together (sunenegkantes). Second aorist active participle of sunpherô. What a glorious conflagration it would be if in every city all the salacious, blasphemous, degrading books, pamphlets, magazines, and papers could be piled together and burned. They counted (sunepsêphisan). First aorist active indicative of sunpsêphizô, to reckon together. In LXX (Jer 29:49). Only here in N.T. Sunkatapsêphizô in Acts 1:26. Fifty thousand pieces of silver (arguriou muriasas pente). Five ten thousand (uriasas) pieces of silver. Ephesus was largely Greek and probably the silver pieces were Greek drachmae or the Latin denarius, probably about ten thousand dollars or two thousand English pounds.

Verse 20

Mightily (kata kratos). According to strength. Only here in N.T., common military term in Thucydides. Such proof of a change counted. Grew and prevailed (êuxanen kai ischuen). Imperfect actives, kept growing and gaining strength. It was a day of triumph for Christ in Ephesus, this city of vast wealth and superstition. Ephesus for centuries will be one of the centres of Christian power. Timothy will come here and John the Apostle and Polycarp and Irenaeus.

Verse 21

Purposed in the spirit (etheto en tôi pneumati). Second aorist middle indicative for mental action and "spirit" expressed also. A new stage in Paul's career begins here, a new division of the Acts. Passed through (dierthôn). Word (dierchomai) used ten times in Acts (cf. Acts 19:1) of missionary journeys (Ramsay). Macedonia and Achaia (tên Makedonian kai Achaian). This was the way that he actually went, but originally he had planned to go to Achaia (Corinth) and then to Macedonia, as he says in 2Co 1:15, but he had now changed that purpose, perhaps because of the bad news from Corinth. Already when he wrote I Corinthians he proposed to go first to Macedonia (1Co 16:5-7). He even hoped to spend the winter in Corinth "if the Lord permit" and to remain in Ephesus till Pentecost, neither of which things he did. I must also see Rome (dei me kai Rômên idein). This section of Acts begins with Rome in the horizon of Paul's plans and the book closes with Paul in Rome (Rackham). Here he feels the necessity of going as in Rom 1:15 he feels himself "debtor" to all including "those in Rome" (Rom 1:16). Paul had long desired to go to Rome (Rom 1:10), but had been frequently hindered (Rom 1:13), but he has definitely set his face to go to Rome and on to Spain (Rom 15:23-29). Paley calls sharp attention to this parallel between Acts 19:21 and Rom 1:10-15; Rom 15:23-29. Rome had a fascination for Paul as the home of Aquila and Priscilla and numerous other friends (Rom 16:1-23), but chiefly as the capital of the Roman Empire and a necessary goal in Paul's ambition to win it to Jesus Christ. His great work in Asia had stirred afresh in him the desire to do his part for Rome. He wrote to Rome from Corinth not long after this and in Jerusalem Jesus in vision will confirm the necessity (dei) that Paul see Rome (Acts 23:11).

Verse 22

Timothy and Erastus (Timotheon kai Eraston). Paul had sent Timothy to Corinth (1Co 4:17) and had requested kindly treatment of this young minister in his difficult task of placating the divided church (1Co 16:10-11) that he might return to Paul as he evidently had before Paul leaves Ephesus. He then despatched Titus to Corinth to finish what Timothy had not quite succeeded in doing with instructions to meet him in Troas. Now Timothy and Erastus (cf. Rom 16:23; 2Ti 4:20) go on to Macedonia to prepare the way for Paul who will come on later. He himself stayed in Asia for a while (autos epechen chronon eis tēn Asian). Literally, He himself had additional time in Asia. Second aorist active indicative of epechō, old and common idiom, only here in the N.T. in this sense and the verb only in Luke and Paul. The reason for Paul's delay is given by him in 1Co 16:8, the great door wide open in Ephesus. Here again Luke and Paul supplement each other. Pentecost came towards the end of May and May was the month of the festival of Artemis (Diana) when great multitudes would come to Ephesus. But he did not remain till Pentecost as both Luke and Paul make plain.

Verse 23

No small stir (tarachos ouk oligos). Same phrase in Acts 12:18 and nowhere else in the N.T. Litotes. Concerning the Way (peri tês hodou). See this phrase for Christianity in Acts 9:2; Acts 19:9; Acts 24:22 which see, like the "Jesus Way" of the Indians. There had already been opposition and "stir" before this stage (c Acts 19:11-20). The fight with wild beasts in 1Co 15:32 (whatever it was) was before that Epistle was written and so before this new uproar. Paul as a Roman citizen could not be thrown to wild beasts, but he so pictured the violent opponents of Christ in Ephesus.

Verse 24

Demetrius, a silversmith (Dêmêtrios argurokopos). The name is common enough and may or may not be the man mentioned in 3Jn 1:12 who was also from the neighbourhood of Ephesus. There is on an inscription at Ephesus near the close of the century a Demetrius called neopoios Artemidos a temple warden of Artemis (Diana). Zoeckler suggests that Luke misunderstood this word neopoios and translated it into argurokopos, a beater (koptô, to beat) of silver (arguros, silver), "which made silver shrines of Artemis" (poiôn naous (argurous) Artemidos). It is true that no silver shrines of the temple have been found in Ephesus, but only numerous terra-cotta ones. Ramsay suggests that the silver ones would naturally be melted down. The date is too late anyhow to identify the Demetrius who was neopoios with the Demetrius argurokopos who made little silver temples of Artemis, though B does not have the word argurous. The poor votaries would buy the terra-cotta ones, the rich the silver shrines (Ramsay, Paul the Traveller, p. 278). These small models of the temple with the statue of Artemis inside would be set up in the houses or even worn as amulets. It is a pity that the Revised Version renders Artemis here. Diana as the Ephesian Artemis is quite distinct from the Greek Artemis, the sister of Apollo, the Diana of the Romans. This temple, built in the 6th century B.C., was burnt by Herostratus Oct. 13 B.C. 356, the night when Alexander the Great was born. It was restored and was considered one of the seven wonders of the world. Artemis was worshipped as the goddess of fertility, like the Lydian Cybele, a figure with many breasts. The great festival in May would offer Demetrius a golden opportunity for the sale of the shrines. Brought no little business (pareicheto ouk oligên ergasian). Imperfect middle, continued to bring (furnish, provide). The middle accents the part that Demetrius played as the leader of the guild of silversmiths, work for himself and for them. Unto the craftsmen (tais technitais). The artisans from technê (craft, art). Trade guilds were common in the ancient world. Demetrius had probably organized this guild and provided the capital for the enterprise.

Verse 25

Whom he gathered together (hous sunathroisias). First aorist active participle of sunathroizô, old verb to assemble together (athroos, a crowd), in the N.T. only here and Acts 12:12. With the workmen of like occupation (kai tous peri ta toiauta ergatas). "And the workmen concerning such things," apparently those who made the marble and terra-cotta shrines who would also be affected in the same way. It was a gathering of the associated trades, not for a strike, for employer and employees met together, but in protest against the preaching of Paul. We have our wealth (hê euporia hêmin estin). The wealth is to us (dative of possession). This old word for wealth occurs here alone in the N.T. It is from eu and poros, easy to pass through, easy to accomplish, to be well off, wealthy, welfare, weal, well-being, rich. Demetrius appeals to this knowledge and self-interest of the artisans as the basis for their zeal for Artemis, piety for revenue.

Verse 26

At Ephesus (Ephesou). Genitive of place as also with Asias (Asia). Cf. Robertson, Grammar, pp. 494 This Paul (ho Paulos houtos). Contemptuous use of houtos. Hath turned away (metestêsen). Changed, transposed. First aorist active indicative, did change. Tribute to Paul's powers as a preacher borne out by Luke's record in Acts 19:10. There may be an element of exaggeration on the part of Demetrius to incite the workmen to action, for the worship of Artemis was their wealth. Paul had cut the nerve of their business. There had long been a Jewish colony in Ephesus, but their protest against idolatry was as nothing compared with Paul's preaching (Furneaux). Which are made with hands (hoi dia cheirôn ginomenoi). Note the present tense, made from time to time. No doubt Paul had put the point sharply as in Athens (Acts 17:29). Isaiah (Isa 44:9-17) had pictured graphically the absurdity of worshipping stocks and stones, flatly forbidden by the Old Testament (Ex 20:4; Ps 135:15-18). The people identified their gods with the images of them and Demetrius reflects that point of view. He was jealous of the brand of gods turned out by his factory. The artisans would stand by him on this point. It was a reflection on their work.

Verse 27

This our trade (touto to meros). Part, share, task, job, trade. Come into disrepute (eis apelegmon elthein). Not in the old writers, but in LXX and Koin.. Literally, reputation, exposure, censure, rejection after examination, and so disrepute. Their business of making gods would lose caste as the liquor trade (still called the trade in England) has done in our day. They felt this keenly and so Demetrius names it first. They felt it in their pockets. Of the great goddess Artemis (tês megalês theas Artemidos). She was generally known as the Great (hê Megalê). An inscription found at Ephesus calls her "the greatest god" (hê megistê theos). The priests were eunuchs and there were virgin priestesses and a lower order of slaves known as temple-sweepers (neôkoroi, verse Acts 19:35). They had wild orgiastic exercises that were disgraceful with their Corybantic processions and revelries. Be made of no account (eis outhen logisthênai). Be reckoned as nothing, first aorist passive infinitive of logizomai and eis. Should even be deposed of her magnificence (mellein te kai kathaireisthai tês megaleiotêtos autês). Note the present infinitive after mellein, ablative case (so best MSS.) after kathaireô, to take down, to depose, to deprive of. The word megaleiotês occurs also in Luke 9:43 (the majesty of God) and in 2Pe 1:16 of the transfiguration of Christ. It is already in the LXX and Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 363) thinks that the word runs parallel with terms used in the emperor-cult. All Asia and the world

holê (hê) Asia kai (hê) oikoumenê. See Acts 11:28 for same use of oikoumenê. An exaggeration, to be sure, but Pausanias says that no deity was more widely worshipped. Temples of Artemis have been found in Spain and Gaul. Multitudo errantium non efficit veritatem (Bengel). Even today heathenism has more followers than Christianity. To think that all this splendour was being set at naught by one man and a despised Jew at that!

Verse 28

They were filled with wrath (genomenoi plereis thumou). Having become full of wrath. Cried out (ekrazon). Inchoative imperfect, began to cry out and kept it up continuously. Reiteration was characteristic of the orgiastic exercises. The Codex Bezae adds after thumou (wrath): Dramontes eis tēn amphodon (running into the street), which they certainly did after the speech of Demetrius. Great is Artemis of the Ephesians (Megalê hê Artemis Ephesiôn). D (Codex Bezae) omits hê (the) and makes it read: "Great Artemis of the Ephesians." This was the usual cry of the votaries in their orgies as the inscriptions show, an ejaculatory outcry or prayer instead of an argument as the other MSS. have it. That is vivid and natural (Ramsay, Church in the Roman Empire, pp. 135f.). Yet on this occasion the artisans were making an argumentative protest and plea against Paul. An inscription at Dionysopolis has "Great is Apollo."

Verse 29

With the confusion (tês sugchuseôs). Genitive case after eplêsthê. An old word, but in the N.T. only here, from verb sugcheô, to pour together like a flood (only in Acts in the N.T.). Vivid description of the inevitable riot that followed "the appearance of such a body in the crowded agora of an excitable city" (Rackham) "vociferating the city's watch-word." They rushed (hômêsan). Ingressive aorist active indicative of hormaô, old verb for impetuous dashing, a case of mob psychology (mob mind), with one accord (homothumadon as in Acts 1:14, etc.). Into the theatre (eis to theatron). A place for seeing (theaomai) spectacles, originally for dramatic representation (Thucydides, Herodotus), then for the spectators, then for the spectacle or show (1Co 4:9). The theatre (amphitheatre) at Ephesus can still be traced in the ruins (Wood, Ephesus) and shows that it was of enormous size capable of seating fifty-six thousand persons (some estimate it only 24,500). It was the place for large public gatherings of any sort out of doors like our football and baseball parks. In particular, gladiatorial shows were held in these theatres. Having seized Gaius and Aristarchus men of Macedonia (sunarpasantes Gaion kai Aristarchon Makedonas). See Acts 6:12 for this same verb. They wanted some victims for this "gladiatorial" show. These two men were "Paul's companions in travel" (sunekdêmous Paulou), together (sun) with Paul in being abroad, away from home or people (ek-dêmous, late word, in the N.T. only here and 2Co 8:19). How the mob got hold of Gaius (Acts 20:4) and Aristarchus (Acts 20:4; Acts 27:2; Col 4:10; Phm 1:24) we do not know whether by accidental recognition or by search after failure to get Paul. In Rom 16:4 Paul speaks of Priscilla and Aquila as those "who for my life laid down their own necks." Paul lived with them in Ephesus as in Corinth. It is possible that Demetrius led the mob to their house and that they refused to allow Paul to go or to be seized at the risk of their own lives. Paul himself may have been desperately ill at this time as we know was the case once during his stay in Ephesus when he felt the answer of death in himself (2Co 1:9) and when God rescued him. That may mean that, ill as he was, Paul wanted to go and face the mob in the theatre, knowing that it meant certain death.

Verse 30

And when Paul was minded to enter in unto the people (Paulou de boulomenou eiselthein eis ton dêmon). Genitive absolute. Plainly Paul wanted to face the howling mob, whether it was the occasion pictured in 2Co 1:9 or not. "St. Paul was not the man to leave his comrades in the lurch" (Knowling). Suffered him not (ouk eiôn auton). Imperfect of eaô, common verb to allow, what Gildersleeve called the negative imperfect (Robertson, Grammar, p. 885), denoting resistance to pressure. The more Paul insisted on going the more the disciples refused to agree to it and they won.

Verse 31

Certain also of the chief officers of Asia (tines de kai tôn Asiarchôn). These "Asiarchs" were ten officers elected by cities in the province who celebrated at their own cost public games and festivals (Page). Each province had such a group of men chosen, as we now know from inscriptions, to supervise the funds connected with the worship of the emperor, to preside at games and festivals even when the temple services were to gods like Artemis. Only rich men could act, but the position was eagerly sought. Being his friends (ontes autôi philoi). Evidently the Asiarchs had a high opinion of Paul and were unwilling for him to expose his life to a wild mob during the festival of Artemis. They were at least tolerant toward Paul and his preaching. "It was an Asiarch who at Smyrna resisted the cry of the populace to throw Polycarp to the lions" (Furneaux). Besought him (parekaloun auton). Imperfect active, showing that the messengers sent had to insist over Paul's protest. "Not to adventure himself" (mê dounai heauton). It was a hazard, a rash adventure "to give himself" (second aorist active infinitive of didômi). Just this sense of "adventure" with the idiom occurs only here in the N.T., though in Polybius V., 14, 9. But the phrase itself Paul uses of Jesus who gave himself for our sins (Gal 1:4; 1Ti 2:6; Tit 2:14). It is not the first time that friends had rescued Paul from peril (Acts 9:25, 30; Acts 17:10, 14). The theatre was no place for Paul. It meant certain death.

Verse 32

Some therefore cried one thing and some another (alloi men oun allo ti ekrazon). This classical use of allos allo (Robertson, Grammar, p. 747) appears also in Acts 2:12; Acts 21:34. Literally, "others cried another thing." The imperfect shows the repetition (kept on crying) and confusion which is also distinctly stated. For the assembly was in confusion (ên gar hê ekklêsia sunkechumenê). The reason for the previous statement. Periphrastic past perfect passive of sugcheô, sugchunô (-unnô), to pour together, to commingle as in verse Acts 19:29 (sugchuseôs). It was not an "assembly" (ekklêsia, ek, kaleô, to call out), but a wholly irregular, disorganized mob in a state (perfect tense) of confusion. There was "a lawful assembly" (verse Acts 19:39), but this mob was not one.

Luke shows his contempt for this mob (Furneaux). Had come together (sunelélutheisan). Past perfect active of sunerchomai. It was an assembly only in one sense. For some reason Demetrius who was responsible for the mob preferred now to keep in the background, though he was known to be the ring-leader of the gathering (verse Acts 19:38). It was just a mob that shouted because others did.

Verse 33

And they brought Alexander out of the crowd (ek de tou ochlou sunebibasan Alexandron). The correct text (Aleph A B) has this verb sunebibasan (from sunbibazô, to put together) instead of proebibasan (from probibazô, to put forward). It is a graphic word, causal of bainô, to go, and occurs in Acts 16:10; Col 2:19; Eph 4:16. Evidently some of the Jews grew afraid that the mob would turn on the Jews as well as on the Christians. Paul was a Jew and so was Aristarchus, one of the prisoners. The Jews were as strongly opposed to idolatry as were the Christians. The Jews putting him forward (probalontôn auton tôn Ioudaiôn). Genitive absolute of the second aorist active participle of proballô, old verb to push forward as leaves in the spring (Luke 21:30). In the N.T. only in these two passages. Alexandria had already disgraceful scenes of Jew-baiting and there was real peril now in Ephesus with this wild mob. So Alexander was pushed forward as the champion to defend the Jews to the excited mob. He may be the same Alexander the coppersmith who did Paul much evil (2Ti 4:14), against whom Paul will warn Timothy then in Ephesus. "The Jews were likely to deal in the copper and silver required for the shrines, so he may have had some trade connexion with the craftsmen which would give him influence" (Furneaux). Beckoned with the hand (kataseisas tèn cheira). Old verb kataseiô, to shake down, here the hand, rapidly waving the hand up and down to get a hearing. In the N.T. elsewhere only in Acts 12:17; Acts 13:16; Acts 21:40 where "with the hand" (têi cheiri, instrumental case) is used instead of tèn cheira (the accusative). Would have made a defence unto the people (êthelen apologeisthai tôi dêmôi). Imperfect active, wanted to make a defence, tried to, started to, but apparently never got out a word. Apologeisthai (present middle infinitive, direct middle, to defend oneself), regular word for formal apology, but in N.T. only by Luke and Paul (twice in Gospel, six times in Acts, and in Rom 2:15; 2Co 12:19).

Verse 34

When they perceived (epignontes). Recognizing, coming to know fully and clearly (epi-), second aorist (ingressive) active participle of epiginôskô. The masculine plural is left as nominative absolute or pendens without a verb. The rioters saw at once that Alexander was (estin, present tense retained in indirect assertion) a Jew by his features. An with one voice cried out (phônê egeneto mia ek pantôn krazontôn). Anacoluthon or construction according to sense. Literally, "one voice arose from all crying." Krazontôn agrees in case (ablative) with pantôn, but Aleph A have krazontes. This loose construction is not uncommon (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 436f.). Now at last the crowd became unanimous (one voice) at the sight of a hated Jew about to defend their attacks on the worship of Artemis. The unanimity lasted "about the space of two hours" (hosei epi hōras duo), "as if for two hours." Their creed centred in this prolonged yell: "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians" with which the disturbance started (verse Acts 19:28).

Verse 35

The town-clerk (ho grammateus). Ephesus was a free city and elected its own officers and the recorder or secretary was the chief magistrate of the city, though the proconsul of the province of Asia resided there. This officer is not a mere secretary of another officer or like the copyists and students of the law among the Jews, but the most influential person in Ephesus who drafted decrees with the aid of the stratēgoi, had charge of the city's money, was the power in control of the assembly, and communicated directly with the proconsul. Inscriptions at Ephesus give frequently this very title for their chief officer and the papyri have it also. The precise function varied in different cities. His name appeared on the coin at Ephesus issued in his year of office. Had quieted the multitude (katasteilas ton ochlon). First aorist active participle of katastellô, to send down, arrange dress (Euripides), lower (Plutarch), restrain (papyrus example), only twice in the N.T. (here and verse Acts 19:36, be quiet), but in LXX and Josephus. He evidently took the rostrum and his very presence as the city's chief officer had a quieting effect on the billowy turmoil and a semblance of order came. He waited, however, till the hubbub had nearly exhausted itself (two hours) and did not speak till there was a chance to be heard. Saith (phêsin). Historical present for vividness. How that. Merely participle ousan and accusative polin in indirect discourse, no conjunction at all (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1040ff.), common idiom after ginôskô, to know. Temple-keeper (neôkoron). Old word from neôs (naos), temple, and koreô, to sweep. Warden, verger, cleaner of the temple, a sacristan. So in Xenophon and Plato. Inscriptions so describe Ephesus as neôkoron tês Artemidos as Luke has it here and also applied to the imperial cultus which finally had several such temples in Ephesus. Other cities claimed the same honour of being neôkoros, but it was the peculiar boast of Ephesus because of the great temple of Artemis. A coin of A.D. 65 describes Ephesus as neôkoros. There are papyri examples of the term applied to individuals, one to Priene as neôkoros of the temple in Ephesus (Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary). And of the image which fell down from Jupiter (kai tou diopetous). Supply agalma (image), "the from heaven-fallen image." From Zeus (Dios) and petô (piptô, pipetô), to fall. Zeus (Jupiter) was considered lord of the sky or heaven and that is the idea in diopetous here. The legend about a statue fallen from heaven occurs concerning the statue of Artemis at Tauris, Minerva at Athens, etc. Thus the recorder soothed the vanity (Rackham) of the crowd by appeal to the world-wide fame of Ephesus as sacristan of Artemis and of her heaven-fallen image.

Verse 36

Cannot be gainsaid (anantirêtôn oun ontôn). Genitive absolute with oun (therefore). Undeniable (an, anti, rêtos), verbal adjective. Occasionally in late Greek (Polybius, etc.), only here in N.T., but adverb anantirêtôs in Acts 10:29. These legends were accepted as true and appeased the mob. Ye ought (deon estin). It is necessary. Periphrastic present indicative instead of dei like 1Pe 1:6; 1Ti 5:13. Be quiet (katestalmenous). Perfect passive participle of katastellô (see verse Acts 19:35). Rash (propetes). Old adjective from pro and petô, to fall forward, headlong, precipitate. In the N.T. only here and 2Ti 3:4, though common in the Koin.. Better look before you leap.

Verse 37

Neither robbers of temples (oute hierosulous). Common word in Greek writers from hieron, temple, and sulaô, to rob, be guilty of sacrilege. The word is found also on inscriptions in Ephesus. The Jews were sometimes guilty of this crime (Rom 2:22), since the heathen temples often had vast treasures like banks. The ancients felt as strongly about temple-robbing as westerners used to feel about a horse-thief. Nor blasphemers of our goddess (oute blasphemountas tèn theon hêmôn). Nor those who blasphemed our goddess. That is to say, these men (Gaius and Aristarchus) as Christians had so conducted themselves (Col 4:5) that no charge could be placed against them either in act (temple-robbery) or word (blasphemy). They had done a rash thing since these men are innocent. Paul had used tact in Ephesus as in Athens in avoiding illegalities.

Verse 38

Have a matter against any one (echousin pros tina logon). For this use of echô logon with pros see Mat 5:32; Col 3:13. The town-clerk names Demetrius and the craftsmen (technitai) as the parties responsible for the riot. The courts are open (agoraioi agontai). Supply hêmerai (days), court days are kept, or sunodoi, court-meetings are now going on, Vulgate conventus forenses aguntur. Old adjective from agora (forum) marketplace where trials were held. Cf. Acts 17:4. There were regular court days whether they were in session then or not. And there are proconsuls (kai anthupatoi eisin). Asia was a senatorial province and so had proconsuls (general phrase) though only one at a time, "a rhetorical plural" (Lightfoot). Page quotes from an inscription of the age of Trajan on an aqueduct at Ephesus in which some of Luke's very words occur (neôkoros, anthupatos, grammateus, dêmos). Let them accuse one another (egkaleitôsan allêlois). Present active imperative of egkaleô (en, kaleô), old verb to call in one's case, to bring a charge against, with the dative. Luke uses the verb six times in Acts for judicial proceedings (Acts 19:38, 40; Acts 23:28, 29; Acts 26:2, 7). The town-clerk makes a definite appeal to the mob for orderly legal procedure as opposed to mob violence in a matter where money and religious prejudice unite, a striking rebuke to so-called lynch-law proceedings in lands today where Christianity is supposed to prevail.

Verse 39

Anything about other matters (ti peraiterô). Most MSS. here have ti peri heterôn, but B b Vulgate read ti peraiterô as in Plato's Phaedo. Several papyri examples of it also. It is comparative peraiteros of pera, beyond. Note also epi in epizêteite. Charges of illegal conduct (Page) should be settled in the regular legal way. But, if you wish to go further and pass resolutions about the matter exciting you, "it shall be settled in the regular assembly" (en tôi ennomôi ekklesiâi). "In the lawful assembly," not by a mob like this. Wood (Ephesus) quotes an inscription there with this very phrase "at every lawful assembly" (kata pâsan ennomon ekklesian). The Roman officials alone could give the sanction for calling such a lawful or regular assembly. The verb epiluô is an old one, but in the N.T. only here and Mark 4:34 (which see) where Jesus privately opened or disclosed the parables to the disciples. The papyri give examples of the verb in financial transactions as well as of the metaphorical sense. The solution will come in the lawful assembly, not in a riot like this. See also 2Pe 1:20 where the substantive epilusis occurs for disclosure or revelation (prophecy).

Verse 40

For indeed we are in danger to be accused concerning this day's riot (kai gar kinduneuomen egkaleisthai staseôs peri tês sêmeron). The text is uncertain. The text of Westcott and Hort means "to be accused of insurrection concerning today's assembly." The peril was real. Kinduneuomen, from kindunos, danger, peril. Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Luke 8:23; 1Co 15:30. There being no cause for it (mêdenos aitiou huparchontos). Genitive absolute with aitios, common adjective (cf. aitia, cause) though in N.T. only here and Heb 5:9; Luke 23:4, 14, 22. And as touching it (peri hou). "Concerning which." But what? No clear antecedent, only the general idea. Give an account of this concourse (apodounai logon peri tês sustrophês tautês). Rationem reddere. They will have to explain matters to the proconsul. Sustrophê (from sun, together, strephô, to turn) is a late word for a conspiracy (Acts 23:12) and a disorderly riot as here (Polybius). In Acts 28:12 sustrephô is used of gathering up a bundle of sticks and of men combining in Mat 17:22. Seneca says that there was nothing on which the Romans looked with such jealousy as a tumultuous meeting.

Verse 41

Dismissed the assembly (apelusen tên ekklêsian). The town-clerk thus gave a semblance of law and order to the mob by formally dismissing them, this much to protect them against the charge to which they were liable. This vivid, graphic picture given by Luke has all the earmarks of historical accuracy. Paul does not describe the incidents in his letters, was not in the theatre in fact, but Luke evidently obtained the details from one who was there. Aristarchus, we know, was with Luke in Caesarea and in Rome and could have supplied all the data necessary. Certainly both Gaius and Aristarchus were lively witnesses of these events since their own lives were involved.

Verse 1

After the uproar was ceased (meta to pausasthai ton thorubon). Literally, after the ceasing (accusative of articular aorist middle infinitive of pauô, to make cease) as to the uproar (accusative of general reference). Noise and riot, already in Mat 26:5; Mat 27:24; Mark 5:38; Mark 14:2; and see in Acts 21:34; Acts 24:18. Pictures the whole incident as bustle and confusion. Took leave (aspamenos). First aorist middle participle of aspazomai, old verb from a intensive and spaô, to draw, to draw to oneself in embrace either in greeting or farewell. Here it is in farewell as in Acts 21:6. Salutation in Acts 21:7, 19. Departed for to go into Macedonia (exêlthen poreuesthai eis Makedonian). Both verbs, single act and then process. Luke here condenses what was probably a whole year of Paul's life and work as we gather from II Corinthians, one of Paul's "weighty and powerful" letters as his enemies called them

(2Co 10:10). "This epistle more than any other is a revelation of S. Paul's own heart: it is his spiritual autobiography and apologia pro vita sua."

Verse 2

Those parts (ta merê ekeina). We have no way of knowing why Luke did not tell of Paul's stay in Troas (2Co 2:12) nor of meeting Titus in Macedonia (2Co 2:13-7:16) nor of Paul's visit to Illyricum (Rom 15:19) to give time for II Corinthians to do its work (2Co 13), one of the most stirring experiences in Paul's whole career when he opened his heart to the Corinthians and won final victory in the church by the help of Titus who also helped him round up the great collection in Achaia. He wrote II Corinthians during this period after Titus arrived from Corinth. The unity of II Corinthians is here assumed. Paul probably met Luke again in Macedonia, but all this is passed by except by the general phrase: "had given them much exhortation" (parakalesas autous logôi pollôi). Literally, "having exhorted them (the Macedonian brethren) with much talk" (instrumental case). Into Greece (eis tên Hellada). That is, Achaia (Acts 18:12; Acts 19:21), and particularly Corinth, whither he had at last come again after repeated attempts, pauses, and delays (2Co 13:1). Now at last the coast was clear and Paul apparently had an open door in Corinth during these three months, so completely had Titus at last done away with the opposition of the Judaizers there.

Verse 3

When he had spent three months there (poiêsas mênas treis). Literally, "having done three months," the same idiom in Ac 14:33; Acts 18:23; Jas 5:13. During this period Paul may have written Galatians as Lightfoot argued and certainly did Romans. We do not have to say that Luke was ignorant of Paul's work during this period, only that he did not choose to enlarge upon it. And a plot was laid against him by the Jews (genomenês epiboulês autôi hupo tôn Ioudaiôn). Genitive absolute, "a plot by the Jews having come against him." Epiboulê is an old word for a plot against one. In the N.T. only in Acts (Acts 9:24; Acts 20:3, 19; Acts 23:30). Please note that this plot is by the Jews, not the Judaizers whom Paul discusses so vehemently in 2Co 10-13. They had given Paul much anguish of heart as is shown in I Cor. and in 2Co 1-7, but that trouble seems now past. It is Paul's old enemies in Corinth who had cherished all these years their defeat at the hands of Gallio (Acts 18:5-17) who now took advantage of Paul's plans for departure to compass his death if possible. As he was about to set sail for Syria (mellonti anagesthai eis tên Surian). The participle mellonti agrees in case (dative) with autôi. For the sense of intending see also verse Acts 20:13. Anagesthai (present middle infinitive) is the common word for putting out to sea (going up, they said, from land) as in Acts 13:13. He determined (egeneto gnômês). The best MSS. here read gnômês (predicate ablative of source like epiluseôs, 2Pe 1:20, Robertson, Grammar, p. 514), not gnômê (nominative). "He became of opinion." The Jews had heard of Paul's plan to sail for Syria and intended in the hurly-burly either to kill him at the docks in Cenchreae or to push him overboard from the crowded pilgrim ship bound for the passover. Fortunately Paul learned of their plot and so eluded them by going through Macedonia. The Codex Bezae adds here that "the Spirit bade him return into Macedonia."

Verse 4

Accompanied him (suneipeto autôi). Imperfect of sunepomai, old and common verb, but only here in the N.T. The singular is used agreeing with the first name mentioned Sôpatros and to be supplied with each of the others. Textus Receptus adds here "into Asia" (achri tês Asias, as far as Asia), but the best documents (Aleph B Vulg. Sah Boh) do not have it. As a matter of fact, Trophimus went as far as Jerusalem (Acts 21:29) and Aristarchus as far as Rome (Acts 27:2; Col 4:10), The phrase could apply only to Sopatros. It is not clear though probable that Luke means to say that these seven brethren, delegates of the various churches (2Co 8:19-23) started from Corinth with Paul. Luke notes the fact that they accompanied Paul, but the party may really have been made up at Philippi where Luke himself joined Paul, the rest of the party having gone on to Troas (Acts 20:5). These were from Roman provinces that shared in the collection (Galatia, Asia, Macedonia, Achaia). In this list three were from Macedonia, Sopater of Beroea, Aristarchus and Secundus of Thessalonica; two from Galatia, Gaius of Derbe and Timothy of Lystra; two from Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus. It is a bit curious that none are named from Achaia. Had Corinth failed after all (2Co 8; 2Co 9) to raise its share of the collection after such eager pledging? Rackham suggests that they may have turned their part over directly to Paul. Luke joined Paul in Philippi and could have handled the money from Achaia. It was an important event and Paul took the utmost pains to remove any opportunity for scandal in the handling of the funds.

Verse 5

Were waiting for us in Troas (emenon hêmâs en Troiadi). Here again we have "us" for the first time since chapter 16 where Paul was with Luke in Philippi. Had Luke remained all this time in Philippi? We do not know, but he is with Paul now till Rome is reached. The seven brethren of verse Acts 20:4 went on ahead from Philippi to Troas while Paul remained with Luke in Philippi.

Verse 6

After the days of unleavened bread (meta tas hêmêrâs tôn azumôn). Paul was a Jew, though a Christian, and observed the Jewish feasts, though he protested against Gentiles being forced to do it (Gal 4:10; Col 2:16). Was Luke a proselyte because he notes the Jewish feasts as here and in Acts 27:9? He may have noted them merely because Paul observed them. But this passover was a year after that in Ephesus when Paul expected to remain there till Pentecost (1Co 16:8). He was hoping now to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (Acts 20:16) as he did. We do not know the precise year, possibly A.D. 56 or 57. In five days (achri hêmêrôn pente). Up to five days (cf. Luke 2:37). D has pemptaioi, "fifth day men," a correct gloss. Cf. deuteraioi, second-day men (Acts 28:13). In Acts 16:11 they made the voyage in two days. Probably adverse winds held them back here. Seven days (hepta hêmêras). To atone for the short stay in Troas before (2Co 2:12) when Paul was so restless. Now he preaches a week to them.

Verse 7

Upon the first day of the week (en de miâi tôn sabbatôn). The cardinal miâi used here for the ordinal prôtêi (Mark 16:9) like the Hebrew ehadh as in Mark 16:2; Mat 28:1; Luke 24:1; John 20:1 and in harmony with the Koin, idiom (Robertson, Grammar, p. 671). Either the singular (Mark 16:9) sabbatou or the plural sabbaton as here was used for the week (sabbath to sabbath). For the first time here we have services mentioned on the first day of the week though in 1Co 16:2 it is implied by the collections stored on that day. In Rev 1:10 the Lord's day seems to be the day of the week on which Jesus rose from the grave. Worship on the first day of the week instead of the seventh naturally arose in Gentile churches, though John 20:26 seems to mean that from the very start the disciples began to meet on the first (or eighth) day. But liberty was allowed as Paul makes plain in Rom 14:5. When we were gathered together (sunêgmenôn hêmôn). Genitive absolute, perfect passive participle of sunagô, to gather together, a formal meeting of the disciples. See this verb used for gatherings of disciples in Acts 4:31; Acts 11:26; Acts 14:27; Acts 15:6, 30; Acts 19:7, 8; 1Co 5:4. In Heb 10:25 the substantive episunagôgên is used for the regular gatherings which some were already neglecting. It is impossible for a church to flourish without regular meetings even if they have to meet in the catacombs as became necessary in Rome. In Russia today the Soviets are trying to break up conventicles of Baptists. They probably met on our Saturday evening, the beginning of the first day at sunset. So these Christians began the day (Sunday) with worship. But, since this is a Gentile community, it is quite possible that Luke means our Sunday evening as the time when this meeting occurs, and the language in John 20:19 "it being evening on that day the first day of the week" naturally means the evening following the day, not the evening preceding the day. To break bread (klasai arton). First aorist active infinitive of purpose of klaô. The language naturally bears the same meaning as in Acts 2:42, the Eucharist or the Lord's Supper which usually followed the Agapê. See 1Co 10:16. The time came, when the Agapê was no longer observed, perhaps because of the abuses noted in 1Co 11:20. Rackham argues that the absence of the article with bread here and its presence (ton arton) in verse Acts 20:11 shows that the Agapê is ] referred to in verse Acts 20:7 and the Eucharist in verse Acts 20:11, but not necessarily so because ton arton may merely refer to arton in verse Acts 20:7. At any rate it should be noted that Paul, who conducted this service, was not a member of the church in Troas, but only a visitor. Discoursed (dielegeto). Imperfect middle because he kept on at length. Intending (mellô). Being about to, on the point of. On the morrow (têi epaurion). Locative case with hêmerai understood after the adverb epaurion. If Paul spoke on our Saturday evening, he made the journey on the first day of the week (our Sunday) after sunrise. If he spoke on our Sunday evening, then he left on our Monday morning. Prolonged his speech (Pareteinen ton logon). Imperfect active (same form as aorist) of parateinô, old verb to stretch beside or lengthwise, to prolong. Vivid picture of Paul's long sermon which went on and on till midnight (mechri mesonuktiou). Paul's purpose to leave early next morning seemed to justify the long discourse. Preachers usually have some excuse for the long sermon which is not always clear to the exhausted audience.

Verse 8

Many lights (lampades hikanai). It was dark at night since the full moon (passover) was three weeks behind. These lamps were probably filled with oil and had wicks that flickered and smoked. They would not meet in the dark. In the upper room (en tôi huperôiôi). As in Acts 1:13 which see.

Verse 9

Sat (kathezomenos). Sitting (present middle participle describing his posture). In the window (epi tês thuridos). Old word diminutive from thura, door, a little door. Latticed window (no glass) opened because of the heat from the lamps and the crowd. Our window was once spelt windore (Hudibras), perhaps from the wrong idea that it was derived from wind and door. Eutyclus (a common slave name) was sitting on (epi) the window sill. Ahaziah "fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber" (2Ki 1:2). In the N.T. thuris only here and 2Co 11:33 (dia thuridos) through which Paul was let down through the wall in Damascus. Borne down with deep sleep (katapheromenos hupnôi bathei). Present passive participle of katapherô, to bear down, and followed by instrumental case (hupnôi). Describes the gradual process of going into deep sleep. Great medical writers use bathus with hupnos as we do today (deep sleep). D here has basei (heavy) for bathei (deep). As Paul discoursed yet longer (dialegomenou tou Paulou epi pleion).

Genitive absolute of present middle participle of dialegomai (cf. verse Acts 20:7). with epi pleion. Eutychus struggled bravely to keep awake, vainly hoping that Paul would finish. But he went on "for more." Being born down by his sleep (katenechtheis apo tou hupnou). First aorist (effective) passive showing the final result of the process described by katapheromenos, finally overcome as a result of (apo) the (note article tou) sleep (ablative case). These four participles (kathezomenos, katapheromenos, dialegomenou, katenechtheis) have no connectives, but are distinguished clearly by case and tense. The difference between the present katapheromenos and the aorist katenechtheis of the same verb is marked. Fell down (epeesen katô). Effective aorist active indicative of piptô with the adverb katô, though katapiptô (compound verb) could have been used (Acts 26:14; Acts 28:6). Hobart (Medical Language of St. Luke) thinks that Luke shows a physician's interest in the causes of the drowsiness of Eutychus (the heat, the crowd, the smell of the lamps, the late hour, the long discourse). Cf. Luke 22:45. From the third story (apo tou tristegou). From treis (three) and stegê (roof), adjective tristegos having three roofs. Was taken up dead (êrthê nekros). First aorist passive indicative of airô. Luke does not say hôs (as) or hôsei (Mark 9:26 as if). The people considered him dead and Luke the physician seems to agree with that view.

Verse 10

Fell on him (epepesen autôi). Second aorist active indicative of epiptô with dative case as Elijah did (1Ki 17:21) and Elisha (2Ki 4:34). Embracing (sunperilabôn). Second aorist active participle of sunperilambanô, old verb to embrace completely (take hold together round), but only here in the N.T. In Ezra 5:3. Make ye no ado (mê thorubeisthe). Stop (mê and present middle imperative of thorubeô) making a noise (thorubos) as the people did on the death of Jairus's daughter (Mat 9:23 thoruboumenou and Mark 5:38 thorubou) when Jesus asked Ti thorubeisthe? For his life is in him (hê gar psuchê autou en autôi estin). This language is relied on by Ramsay, Wendt, Zoeckler to show that Eutychus had not really died, but had merely swooned. Paul's language would suit that view, but it suits equally well the idea that he had just been restored to life and so is indecisive. Furneaux urges also the fact that his friends did not bring him back to the meeting till morning (verse Acts 20:12) as additional evidence that it was a case of swooning rather than of death. But this again is not conclusive as they would naturally not take him back at once. One will believe here as the facts appeal to him.

Verse 11

When he was gone up (anabas). Second aorist active participle in sharp contrast to katabas (went down) of verse Acts 20:10. Had broken bread (klasas ton arton). Probably the Eucharist to observe which ordinance Paul had come and tarried (verse Acts 20:7), though some scholars distinguish between what took place in verse Acts 20:7 and verse Acts 20:11, needlessly so as was stated on verse Acts 20:7. And eaten (kai geusamenos). The word is used in Acts 10:10 of eating an ordinary meal and so might apply to the Agapé, but it suits equally for the Eucharist. The accident had interrupted Paul's sermon so that it was observed now and then Paul resumed his discourse. And had talked with them a long while (eph' hikanon te homilêsas). Luke, as we have seen, is fond of hikanos for periods of time, for a considerable space of time, "even till break of day" (achri augês). Old word for brightness, radiance like German Auge, English eye, only here in the N.T. Occurs in the papyri and in modern Greek for dawn. This second discourse lasted from midnight till dawn and was probably more informal (as in Acts 10:27) and conversational (homilêsas, though our word homiletics comes from homileô) than the discourse before midnight (dialegomai, verses Acts 20:7, 9). He had much to say before he left. So he departed (houtôs exêlthen). Thus Luke sums up the result. Paul left (went forth) only after all the events narrated by the numerous preceding participles had taken place. Effective aorist active indicative exelthen. Houtôs here equals tum demum, now at length (Acts 27:7) as Page shows.

Verse 12

They brought the lad alive (êgagon ton paida zônta). Second aorist active indicative of agô. Evidently the special friends of the lad who now either brought him back to the room or (Rendall) took him home to his family. Knowling holds that zônta (living) here is pointless unless he had been dead. He had been taken up dead and now they brought him living. Not a little (ou metriôs). Not moderately, that is a great deal. Luke is fond of this use of the figure litotes (use of the negative) instead of the strong positive (Acts 1:5, etc.). D (Codex Bezae) has here instead of êgagon these words: alpozomenôn de autôn êgagen ton neaniskon zônta (while they were saying farewell he brought the young man alive). This reading pictures the joyful scene over the lad's restoration as Paul was leaving.

Verse 13

To the ship (epi to ploion). Note article. It is possible that Paul's party had chartered a coasting vessel from Philippi or Troas to take them to Patara in Lycia. Hence the boat stopped when and where Paul wished. That is possible, but not certain, for Paul could simply have accommodated himself to the plans of the ship's managers. To take in Paul (analambanein ton Paulon). So in verse Acts 20:14. Same use in 2Ti 4:11: "Picking up Mark" (Markon analabôn). Assos was a seaport south of Troas in Mysia in the province of Asia. He had appointed (diatetagmenos ên). Past perfect periphrastic middle of diatassô, old verb to give orders (military in particular). To go by land (pezeuein). Present active infinitive of pezeuô, old verb to go on foot, not on horse back or in a carriage or by ship. Here only in the N.T. It was about twenty miles over a paved Roman road, much shorter (less than half) than the sea voyage around Cape Lectum. It was a beautiful walk in the spring-time and no doubt Paul enjoyed it whatever his reason was for going thus to Assos while the rest went by sea. Certainly he was entitled to a little time alone, this one day, as Jesus sought the Father in the night watches (Mat 14:23).

Verse 14

Met us (suneballen hêmin). Imperfect active where the aorist (sunebalen, as C D have it) would seem more natural. It may mean that as soon as (hôs) Paul "came near or began to meet us" (inchoative imperfect), we picked him up. Luke alone in the N.T. uses sunballô to bring or come together either in a friendly sense as here or as enemies (Luke 14:31). To Mitylene (eis Mitulênên). The capital of Lesbos about thirty miles from Assos, an easy day's sailing.

Verse 15

We came over against Chios (katêntêsamen antikrus Chiou). Luke uses this Koin, verb several times (Acts 16:1; Acts 18:19), meaning to come right down in front of and the notion of anta is made plainer by antikrus, face to face with, common "improper" preposition only here in the N.T. They probably lay off the coast (anchoring) during the night instead of putting into the harbour. The Island of Chios is about eight miles from the mainland. The next day (têi heterâi). The third day in reality from Assos (the fourth from Troas), in contrast with têi epiousêi just before for Chios. We touched at Samos (parebalomen eis Samon). Second aorist active of paraballô, to throw alongside, to cross over, to put in by. So Thucydides III. 32. Only here in the N.T. though in Textus Receptus in Mark 4:30. The word parable (parabolê) is from this verb. The Textus Receptus adds here kai meinantes en Trogylliôi (and remaining at Trogyllium), but clearly not genuine. In passing from Chios to Samos they sailed past Ephesus to save time for Pentecost in Jerusalem (verse Acts 20:16), if in control of the ship, or because the captain allowed Paul to have his way. The island of Samos is still further down the coast below Chios. It is not stated whether a stop was made here or not. The day after (têi echomenêi). The day holding itself next to the one before. Note Luke's three terms in this verse (têi epiousêi, têi heterâi, têi echomenêi). This would be the fourth from Assos. To Miletus (eis Milêton). About 28 miles south of Ephesus and now the site is several miles from the sea due to the silt from the Maeander. This city, once the chief city of the Ionian Greeks, was now quite eclipsed by Ephesus.

Verse 16

For Paul had determined (kekrikei gar ho Paulos). Past perfect active (correct text) of krinô and not the aorist ekrine. Either Paul controlled the ship or the captain was willing to oblige him. To sail past Ephesus (parapleusai tèn Epheson). First aorist active infinitive of parapleô, old verb to sail beside, only here in the N.T. That he might not have (hopôs mê genêtai autôi). Final clause (negative) with aorist middle subjunctive of ginomai and dative "that it might not happen to him." To spend time (chronotribêsai). First orist active of the late compound verb chronotribêô (chronos, time, tribô, to spend), only here in the N.T. The verb tribô, to rub, to wear out by rubbing, lends itself to the idea of wasting time. It was only a year ago that Paul had left Ephesus in haste after the riot. It was not expedient to go back so soon if he meant to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost. Paul clearly felt (Rom 15:1) that the presentation of this collection at Pentecost to the Jewish Christians would have a wholesome influence as it had done once before (Acts 11:30). He was hastening (espeuden). Imperfect active of speudô, old verb to hasten as in Luke 2:16; Luke 19:5, 6. If it were possible for him (ei dunaton eiê autôi). Condition of the fourth class (optative mode), if it should be possible for him. The form is a remote possibility. It was only some thirty days till Pentecost. The day of Pentecost (tên hêmeran tês pentêkostês). Note the accusative case. Paul wanted to be there for the whole day. See Acts 2:1 for this very phrase.

Verse 17

Called to him (metekalesato). Aorist middle (indirect) indicative of metakaleô, old verb to call from one place to another (meta for "change"), middle to call to oneself, only in Acts in the N.T. (Acts 7:14; Acts 10:32; Acts 20:17; Acts 24:25). Ephesus was some thirty miles, a stiff day's journey each way. They would be with Paul the third day of the stay in Miletus. The elders of the church (tous presbuterous tês ekklêsias). The very men whom Paul terms "bishops" (episkopous) in verse Acts 20:28 just as in Tit 1:5, 7 where both terms (presbuterous, ton episkopon) describe the same office. The term "elder" applied to Christian ministers first appears in Acts 11:30 in Jerusalem and reappears in Acts 15:4, 6, 22 in connection with the apostles and the church. The "elders" are not "apostles" but are "bishops" (cf. Php 1:1) and with "deacons" constitute the two classes of officers in the early churches. Ignatius shows that in the early second century the office of bishop over the elders had developed, but Lightfoot has shown that it was not so in the first century. Each church, as in Jerusalem, Philippi, Ephesus, had a number of "elders" ("bishops") in the one great city church. Hackett thinks that other ministers from the neighbourhood also came. It was a noble group of preachers and Paul, the greatest preacher of the ages, makes a remarkable talk to preachers with all the earmarks of Pauline originality (Spitta, Apostelgeschichte, p. 252) as shown by the characteristic Pauline words, phrases, ideas current in all his Epistles including the Pastoral (testify, course, pure, take heed, presbyter, bishop, acquire, apparel). Luke heard this address as he may and probably did hear those in Jerusalem and Caesarea (Acts 21:1-26:32; Acts 21:1-26:32). Furneaux suggests that Luke probably took shorthand notes of the address since Galen says that his students took down his medical lectures in shorthand: "At any rate, of all the speeches in the Acts this contains most of Paul and least of Luke. ... It reveals Paul as nothing else does. The man who spoke it is no longer a man of eighteen centuries ago: he is of yesterday; of today. He speaks as we speak and feels as we feel; or rather as we fain would speak and feel." We have seen and listened to Paul speak to the Jews in Antioch in Pisidia as Luke pictures the scene, to the uneducated pagans at Lystra, to the cultured Greeks in Athens. We shall hear him plead for his life to the Jewish mob in Jerusalem, to the Roman governor Felix in Caesarea, to the Jewish "King" Herod Agrippa II in Caesarea, and at last to the Jews in Rome. But here Paul unbosoms himself to the ministers of the church in Ephesus where he had spent three years (longer than with any other church) and where he had such varied experiences of prowess and persecution. He opens his heart to these men as he does not to the average crowd even of believers. It is Paul's Apologia pro sua Vita. He will probably not see them again and so the outlook and attitude is similar to the farewell discourse of Jesus to the disciples in the upper room (John 13:1-17:26). He warns them about future perils as Jesus had done. Paul's words here will repay any preacher's study today. There is the same high conception of the ministry here that Paul had already elaborated in 2Co 2:12-6:10 (see my Glory of the Ministry). It is a fitting time and occasion for Paul to take stock of his ministry at the close of the third mission tour. What wonders had God wrought already.

Verse 18

Ye yourselves know (humeis epistasthe). Pronoun expressed and emphatic. He appeals to their personal knowledge of his life in Ephesus. From the first day that (apo prôtês hêmeras aph' hês). "From first day from which." He had first "set foot" (epêbên, second orist active indicative of old verb epibainô, to step upon or step into) in Ephesus four years ago in the spring of 51 or 52, but had returned from Antioch that autumn. It is now spring of 54 or 55 so that his actual ministry in Ephesus was about two and a half years, roughly three years (verse Acts 20:31). After what manner I was with you (pôs meth' hûmôn egenomên). Literally, "How I came (from Asia and so was) with you." Cf. 1Th 1:5; 2Th 2:1-10 where Paul likewise dares to refer boldly to his life while with them "all the time" (ton panta chronon). Accusative of duration of time. So far as we know, Paul stuck to Ephesus the whole period. He had devoted himself consecratedly to the task in Ephesus. Each pastor is bishop of his field and has a golden opportunity to work it for Christ. One of the saddest things about the present situation is the restlessness of preachers to go elsewhere instead of devoting themselves wholly to the task where they are. Acts 20:19. Serving the Lord (douleuôn tôi kuriôi). It was Paul's glory to be the doulos (bond-slave) as in Rom 1:1; Php 1:1. Paul alone, save Jesus in Mat 6:24; Luke 16:13, uses douleuô six times for serving God (Page). With all lowliness of mind (meta pasês tapeinophrosunês). Lightfoot notes that heathen writers use this word for a grovelling, abject state of mind, but Paul follows Christ in using it for humility, humble-mindedness that should mark every Christian and in particular the preacher. With tears (dakruôn). Construed with meta. Paul was a man of the deepest emotion along with his high intellectuality. He mentions his tears again in verse Acts 20:31, tears of sorrow and of anxiety. He refers to his tears in writing the sharp letter to the church in Corinth (2Co 2:4) and in denouncing the sensual apostates in Php 3:18. Adolphe Monod has a wonderful sermon on the tears of Paul. Consider also the tears of Jesus. Trials which befell me (peirasmôn tôn sumbantôn moi). Construed also with meta. Second aorist active participle of sunbainô, to walk with, to go with, to come together, to happen, to befall. Very common in this sense in the old Greek (cf. Acts 3:10). By the plots of the Jews (en tais epiboulais tôn Ioudaiôn). Like the plot (epiboulê) against him in Corinth (Acts 20:3) as well as the earlier trial before Gallio and the attacks in Thessalonica. In Acts 19:9 Luke shows the hostile attitude of the Jews in Ephesus that drove Paul out of the synagogue to the school of Tyrannus. He does not describe in detail these "plots" which may easily be imagined from Paul's own letters and may be even referred to in 1Co 4:10; 1Co 15:30; 1Co 16:9; 2Co 1:4-10; 2Co 7:5; 2Co 11:23. In fact, one has only to dwell on the allusions in 2Co 11:1-33 to picture what Paul's life was in Ephesus during these three years. Luke gives in Acts 19:1-41 the outbreak of Demetrius, but Paul had already fought with "wild-beasts" there.

Verse 20

How that I shrank not (hôs ouden hupesteilamen). Still indirect discourse (question) after epistasthe (ye know) with hôs like pôs in verse Acts 20:18. First aorist middle of hupostellô, old verb to draw under or back. It was so used of drawing back or down sails on a ship and, as Paul had so recently been on the sea, that may be the metaphor here. But it is not necessarily so as the direct middle here makes good sense and is frequent, to withdraw oneself, to cower, to shrink, to conceal, to dissemble as in Hab 2:4 (Heb 10:38). Demosthenes so used it to shrink from declaring out of fear for others. This open candour of Paul is supported by his Epistles (1Th 2:4, 11; 2Co 4:2; Gal 1:10). From declaring unto you (tou mê anaggeilai humin). Ablative case of the articular first aorist active infinitive of anaggellô with the redundant negative after verbs of hindering, etc. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1094). Anything that was profitable (tôn sumpherontôn). Partitive genitive after ouden of the articular present active participle of sumpherô, to bear together, be profitable. Publicly (dêmosiâi, adverb) and from house to house (kai kat' oikous). By (according to) houses. It is worth noting that this greatest of preachers preached from house to house and did not make his visits merely social calls. He was doing kingdom business all the while as in the house of Aquila and Priscilla (1Co 16:19).

Verse 21

Testifying (diamarturomenos). As Peter did (Acts 2:40) where Luke uses this same word thoroughly Lucan and Pauline. So again in verses Acts 20:23, 24. Paul here as in Rom 1:16 includes both Jews and Greeks, to the Jew first. Repentance toward God (tên eis theon metanoian) and faith toward our Lord Jesus (kai pistin eis ton kurion hêmôn Iêsoun). These two elements run through the Epistle to the Romans which Paul had recently written and sent from Corinth. These two elements appear in all Paul's preaching whether "to Jews or Gentiles, to philosophers at Athens or to peasants at Lystra, he preached repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus" (Knowling).

Verse 22

Bound in the spirit (dedemenos tōi pneumati). Perfect passive participle of deō, to bind, with the locative case. "Bound in my spirit" he means, as in Acts 19:21, from a high sense of duty. The mention of "the Holy Spirit" specifically in verse Acts 20:23 seems to be in contrast to his own spirit here. His own spirit was under the control of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:16) and the sense does not differ greatly. Not knowing (mê eidōs). Second perfect active participle of oīda with mê. That shall befall me (ta sunantēsonta emoi). Articular future active participle of sunantaō, to meet with (Acts 10:25), to befall (with associative instrumental case) and compare with sumbantōn (befell) in verse Acts 20:19. One of the rare instances of the future participle in the N.T.

Verse 23

Save that (plên hoti). The hoti clause is really in the ablative case after plên, here a preposition as in Php 1:18, this idiom plên hoti occasionally in ancient Greek. In every city (kata polin). Singular here though plural in kat' oikous (verse Acts 20:20). Bonds and afflictions (desma kai thlipseis). Both together as in Php 1:17; 2Co 1:8. Literal bonds and actual pressures. Abide me (me menousin). With the accusative as in verse Acts 20:5 (emenon hēmas) and nowhere else in the N.T.

Verse 24

But I hold not my life of any account (all' oudenos logou poioumai tēn psuchēn). Neat Greek idiom, accusative psuchēn and genitive logou and then Paul adds "dear unto myself" (timian emautōi) in apposition with psuchēn (really a combination of two constructions). So that I may accomplish my course (hōs teleiōsō dromon mou). Rather, "In order that" (purpose, not result). Aleph and B read teleiōsō here (first aorist active subjunctive) rather than teleiōsai (first aorist active infinitive). It is the lone instance in the N.T. of hós as a final particle (Robertson, Grammar, p. 987). Paul in Acts 13:25 in his sermon at Antioch in Pisidia described John as fulfilling his course and in 2Ti 4:7 he will say: "I have finished my course" (ton dromon teteleka). He will run the race to the end. Which I received from the Lord Jesus (hên elabon para tou kuriou Iêsou). Of that fact he never had a doubt and it was a proud boast (Gal 1:1; Rom 11:13). The gospel of the grace of God (to euaggelion tês charitos tou theou). To Paul the gospel consisted in the grace of God. See this word "grace" (charis) in Romans and his other Epistles.

Verse 25

And now, behold (kai nun, idou). Second time and solemn reminder as in verse Acts 20:22. I know (egô oida). Emphasis on egô which is expressed. Ye all (humeis pantes). In very emphatic position after the verb opsesthe (shall see) and the object (my face). Twice Paul will write from Rome (Php 2:24; Phm 1:22) the hope of coming east again; but that is in the future, and here Paul is expressing his personal conviction and his fears. The Pastoral Epistles show Paul did come to Ephesus again (1Ti 1:3; 1Ti 3:14; 1Ti 4:13) and Troas (2Ti 4:13) and Miletus (2Ti 4:20). There need be no surprise that Paul's fears turned out otherwise. He had reason enough for them. Among whom I went about (en hois diêlthon). Apparently Paul here has in mind others beside the ministers. They represented the church in Ephesus and the whole region where Paul laboured.

Verse 26

I testify (marturomai). Elsewhere in the N.T. only in Paul's Epistles (Gal 5:3; Eph 4:17; 1Th 2:12). It means "I call to witness" while martureô means "I bear witness." This day (en têi sêmeron hêmerâi). The today day, the last day with you, our parting day. I am pure from the blood of all men (katharos eimi apo tou haimatos pantôn). Paul was sensitive on this point as in Corinth (Acts 18:6). It is much for any preacher to claim and it ought to be true of all. The papyri also give this use of apo with the ablative rather than the mere ablative after katharos.

Verse 27

Paul here repeats the very words and idioms used in verse Acts 20:20, adding "the whole counsel of God" (pâsan tèn boulên tou theou). All the counsel of God that concerned Paul's work and nothing inconsistent with the purpose of God of redemption through Christ Jesus (Page).

Verse 28

Take heed unto yourselves (prosechete heautois). The full phrase had ton noun, hold your mind on yourselves (or other object in the dative), as often in old writers and in Job 7:17. But the ancients often used the idiom with noun understood, but not expressed as here and Acts 5:35; Luke 12:1; Luke 17:3; Luke 21:34; 1Ti 1:4; 1Ti 3:8; 1Ti 4:13. Epeche is so used in 1Ti 4:16. To all the flock (panti tõi poimniõi). Contracted form of poimenion = poimnê (John 10:16) already in Luke 12:32 and also in Acts 20:29; 1Pe 5:2, 3. Common in old Greek. Hath made (etheto). Did make, second aorist middle indicative of tithêmi, did appoint. Paul evidently believed that the Holy Spirit calls and appoints ministers. Bishops (episkopous). The same men termed elders in verse Acts 20:17 which see. To shepherd (poimainein). Present active infinitive of purpose of poimainô, old verb to feed or tend the flock (poimnê, poimnion), to act as shepherd (poimên). These ministers are thus in Paul's speech called elders (verse Acts 20:17), bishops (verse Acts 20:28), and shepherds (verse Acts 20:28). Jesus had used this very word to Peter (John 21:16, twice boske, feed, Job 21:15, 17) and Peter will use it in addressing fellow-elders (1Pe 5:2) with memories, no doubt of the words of Jesus to him. The "elders" were to watch over as "bishops" and "tend and feed as shepherds" the flock. Jesus is termed "the shepherd and bishop of your souls" in 1Pe 2:25 and "the great Shepherd of the sheep" in Heb 13:20. Jesus called himself "the good Shepherd" in John 10:11. The church of God (tèn ekklêsian tou theou). The correct text, not "the church of the Lord" or "the church of the Lord and God" (Robertson, Introduction to Textual Criticism of the N.T., p. 189). He purchased (periepoiêsato). First aorist middle of peripoieô, old verb to reserve, to preserve (for or by oneself, in the middle). In the N.T. only in Luke Acts 17:33; Acts 20:28; 1Ti 3:13. The substantive peripoiêsîn (preservation, possession) occurs in 1Pe 2:9 ("a peculiar people" = a people for a possession) and in Eph 1:14. With his own blood (dia tou haimatos tou idiou). Through the agency of (dia) his own blood. Whose blood? If tou theou (Aleph B Vulg.) is correct, as it is, then Jesus is here called "God" who shed his own blood for the flock. It will not do to say that Paul did not call Jesus God, for we have Rom 9:5; Col 2:9; Tit 2:13 where he does that very thing, besides Col 1:15-20; Php 2:5-11.

Verse 29

After my departing (meta tēn aphixin mou). Not his death, but his departure from them. From aphikneomai and usually meant arrival, but departure in Herodotus IX. 17, 76 as here. Grievous wolves (lukoi bareis). Bareis is heavy, rapacious, harsh. Jesus had already so described false teachers who would raven the fold (John 10:12). Whether Paul had in mind the Judaizers who had given him so much trouble in Antioch, Jerusalem, Galatia, Corinth or the Gnostics the shadow of whose coming he already foresaw is not perfectly clear. But it will not be many years before Epaphras will come to Rome from Colossae with news of the new peril there (Epistle to the Colossians). In writing to Timothy (1Ti 1:20) Paul will warn him against some who have already made shipwreck of their faith. In Rev 2:2 John will represent Jesus as describing false apostles in Ephesus. Not sparing the flock (mē pheidomenoi tou poimniou). Litotes again as so often in Acts. Sparing the flock was not the fashion of wolves. Jesus sent the seventy as lambs in the midst of wolves (Luke 10:3). In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus had pictured the false prophets who would come as ravening wolves in sheep's clothing (Mat 7:15).

Verse 30

From among your own selves (ex humōn autōn). In sheep's clothing just as Jesus had foretold. The outcome fully justified Paul's apprehensions as we see in Colossians, Ephesians, I and II Timothy, Revelation. False philosophy, immorality, asceticism will lead some astray (Col 2:8, 18; Eph 4:14; Eph 5:6). John will picture "antichrists" who went out from us because they were not of us (1Jn 2:18). There is a false optimism that is complacently blind as well as a despondent pessimism that gives up the fight. Perverse things (diestrammena). Perfect passive participle of diastrephô, old verb to turn aside, twist, distort as in Acts 13:8, 10. To draw away (tou apospâin). Articular genitive present active participle of purpose from apospaô, old verb used to draw the sword (Mat 26:51), to separate (Luke 22:41; Acts 21:1). The pity of it is that such leaders of dissension can always gain a certain following. Paul's long residence in Ephesus enabled him to judge clearly of conditions there.

Verse 31

Wherefore watch ye (dio grêgoreite). Paul has concluded his defence of himself and his warning. Now he exhorts on the basis of it (dio) because of which thing. The very command of Jesus concerning the perils before his return as in Mark 13:35 (grêgoreite), the very form (late present imperative from the second perfect egrêgora of egeirô, to arouse). Stay awake. I ceased not to admonish (ouk epausamên nouthetôn). Participle describes Paul, I did not cease admonishing, night and day (nukta kai hêmeran, accusative of extent of time, for three years trietian, accusative of extent of time also). Nouthetôn is from noutheteô, to put sense into one. So Paul kept it up with tears (verse Acts 20:19) if so be he could save the Ephesians from the impending perils. Forewarned is to be forearmed. Paul did his duty by them.

Verse 32

And now (kai ta nun). Same phrase as in verses Acts 20:22, 25 save that idou (behold) is wanting and the article ta occurs before nun, accusative of general reference. And as to the present things (or situation) as in Acts 4:29. I commend (paratithemai). Present middle indicative of paratithêmi, old verb to place beside, middle, to deposit with one, to interest as in 1Ti 1:18; 2Ti 2:2. Paul can now only do this, but he does it hopefully. Cf. 1Pe 4:19. The word of his grace (tôi logôi tês charitos autou). The instrumentality through preaching and the Holy Spirit employed by God. Cf. Col 4:6; Eph 4:29. Which is able to build up (tôi dunamenôi oikodomêsai). God works through the word of his grace and so it is able to build up (edify); a favourite Pauline word (1Co 3:10-14; 1Co 3:9; 2Co 5:1; Eph 2:20-22; 2Ti 3:15; etc.), and Jas 1:21. The very words "build" and "inheritance among the sanctified" will occur in Eph 1:11; Eph 2:20; Eph 3:18 and which some may recall on reading. Cf. Col 1:12. Stephen in Acts 7:5 used the word "inheritance" (klêronomian), nowhere else in Acts, but in Eph 1:14, 18; Eph 5:5. In Eph 1:18 the very expression occurs "his inheritance among the saints " (tên klêronomian autou en tois hagiois).

Verse 33

No man's silver or gold or apparel (arguriou ê chrusiou ê himatismou oudenos). Genitive case after epethumêsa. One of the slanders against Paul was that he was raising this collection, ostensibly for the poor, really for himself (2Co 12:17). He includes "apparel" because oriental wealth consisted largely in fine apparel (not old worn out clothes). See Gen 24:53; 2Ki 5:5; Ps 45:13; Mat 6:19. Paul did not preach just for money.

Verse 34

Ye yourselves (autoi). Intensive pronoun. Certainly they knew that the church in Ephesus had not supported Paul while there. These hands (hai cheires hautai). Paul was not above manual labour. He pointed to his hands with pride as proof that he toiled at his trade of tent-making as at Thessalonica and Corinth for his own needs (chreiais) and for those with him (probably Aquila and Priscilla) with whom he lived and probably Timothy because of his often infirmities (1Ti 5:23). Ministered (hupêretêsan). First aorist active of hupêreteô, to act as under rower, old verb, but in the N.T. only in Acts 13:36; Acts 20:34; Acts 24:23. While in Ephesus Paul wrote to Corinth: "We toil, working with our own hands" (1Co 4:12). "As he held them up, they saw a tongue of truth in every seam that marked them" (Furneaux).

Verse 35

I gave you an example (hupedeixa). First aorist active indicative of hupodeiknumi, old verb to show under one's eyes, to give object lesson, by deed as well as by word (Luke 6:47). Hupodeigma means example (John 13:15; Jas 5:10). So Paul appeals to his example in 1Co 11:1; Php 3:17. Panta is accusative plural of general reference (in all things). So labouring ye ought to help (houtôs kopiôntas dei antilambanesthai). So, as I did. Necessity (dei). Toiling (kopiôntas) not just for ourselves, but to help (antilambanesthai), to take hold yourselves (middle voice) at the other end (anti). This verb common in the old Greek, but in the N.T. only in Luke 1:54; Acts 20:35; 1Ti 6:2. This noble plea to help the weak is the very spirit of Christ (1Th 5:14; 1Co 12:28; Rom 5:6; Rom 14:1). In 1Th 5:14 antechesthe tôn asthenountôn we have Paul's very idea again. Every Community Chest appeal today re-echoes Paul's plea. He himself said (autos eipen). Not in the Gospels, one of the sayings of Jesus in current use that Paul had received and treasured. Various other Agrapha of Jesus have been preserved in ancient writers and some in recently discovered papyri which may be genuine or not. We are grateful that Paul treasured this one. This Beatitude (on makarion see on Mat 5:3-11) is illustrated by the whole life of Jesus with the Cross as the culmination. Aristotle (Eth. IV. I) has a saying somewhat like this, but assigns the feeling of superiority as the reason (Page), an utterly different idea from that here. This quotation raises the question of how much Paul personally knew of the life and sayings of Jesus.

Verse 36

He kneeled down (theis ta gonata autou). Second aorist active participle of tithêmi, to place. The very idiom used in Acts 7:60 of Stephen. Not in ancient writers and only six times in the N.T. (Mark 15:19; Luke 22:41; Acts 7:60; Acts 9:40; Acts 20:36; Acts 21:5). Certainly kneeling in prayer is a fitting attitude (cf. Jesus, Luke 22:41), though not the only proper one (Mat 6:5). Paul apparently prayed aloud (prosêuxato).

Verse 37

They all wept sore (hikanos klauthmos egeneto pantôn). Literally, There came considerable weeping of all (on the part of all, genitive case). Kissed him (kataphiloun auton). Imperfect active of kataphileô, old verb, intensive with kata and repetition shown also by the tense: They kept on kissing or kissed repeatedly, probably one after the other falling on his neck. Cf. also Mat 26:49.

Verse 38

Sorrowing (odunômenoî). Present middle participle of odunaô, old verb to cause intense pain, to torment (Luke 16:24), middle to distress oneself (Luke 2:48; Acts 20:38). Nowhere else in N.T. Which he had spoken (hôi eirêkeî). Relative attracted to the case of the antecedent logôi (word). Past perfect indicative of eipon. They brought him on his way (proepempon auton). Imperfect active of propempô, old verb to send forward, to accompany as in Acts 15:3; Acts 20:38; Acts 21:5; 1Co 16:6, 11; 2Co 1:16; Tit 3:13; 3Jn 1:6. Graphic picture of Paul's departure from this group of ministers.

Were parted from them (apospasthentas ap' autôn). First aorist passive participle of apospaô same verb as in Acts 20:30; Luke 22:41. Had set sail (anachthênai). First aorist passive of anagô, the usual verb to put out (up) to sea as in verse Acts 21:2 (anêchthêmen). We came with a straight course (euthudromêsantes êlthomen). The same verb (aorist active participle of euthudromeô) used by Luke in Acts 16:11 of the voyage from Troas to Samothrace and Neapolis, which see. Unto Cos (eis tèn Ko). Standing today, about forty nautical miles south from Miletus, island famous as the birthplace of Hippocrates and Apelles with a great medical school. Great trading place with many Jews. The next day (têi hexês). Locative case with hêmerâi (day) understood. The adverb hexês is from echô (future hexô) and means successively or in order. This is another one of Luke's ways of saying "on the next day" (cf. three others in Acts 20:15). Unto Rhodes (eis tèn Rhodon). Called the island of roses. The sun shone most days and made roses luxuriant. The great colossus which represented the sun, one of the seven wonders of the world, was prostrate at this time. The island was at the entrance to the Aegean Sea and had a great university, especially for rhetoric and oratory. There was great commerce also. Unto Patara (eis Patara). A seaport on the Lycian coast on the left bank of the Xanthus. It once had an oracle of Apollo which rivalled that at Delphi. This was the course taken by hundreds of ships every season.

Verse 2

Having found a ship (heurontes ploion). Paul had used a small coasting vessel (probably hired) that anchored each night at Cos, Rhodes, Patara. He was still some four hundred miles from Jerusalem. But at Patara Paul caught a large vessel (a merchantman) that could sail across the open sea. Crossing over unto Phoenicia (diaperôn eis Phoinikên). Neuter singular accusative (agreeing with ploion) present active participle of diaperaô, old verb to go between (dia) and so across to Tyre. We went aboard (epibantes). Second aorist active participle of epibainô.

Verse 3

When we had come in sight of Cyprus (anaphanantes tèn Kupron). First aorist active participle of anaphainô (Doric form -phanântes rather than the Attic -phênantes), old verb to make appear, bring to light, to manifest. Having made Cyprus visible or rise up out of the sea. Nautical terms. In the N.T. only here and Luke 19:11 which see. On the left hand (euônumon). Compound feminine adjective like masculine. They sailed south of Cyprus. We sailed (epleomen). Imperfect active of common verb pleô, kept on sailing till we came to Syria. Landed at Tyre (katêlthomen eis Turon). Came down to Tyre. Then a free city of Syria in honour of its former greatness (cf. the long siege by Alexander the Great). There (ekeise). Thither, literally. Only one other instance in N.T., Acts 22:5 which may be pertinent = ekei (there). Was to unlade (ên apophortizomenon). Periphrastic imperfect middle of apophortizô, late verb from apo and phortos, load, but here only in the N.T. Literally, "For thither the boat was unloading her cargo," a sort of "customary" or "progressive" imperfect (Robertson, Grammar, p. 884). Burden (gomon). Cargo, old word, from gemô, to be full. Only here and Rev 18:11 in N.T. Probably a grain or fruit ship. It took seven days here to unload and reload.

Verse 4

Having found (aneurontes). Second aorist active participle of aneuriskô, to seek for, to find by searching (ana). There was a church here, but it was a large city and the number of members may not have been large. Probably some of those that fled from Jerusalem who came to Phoenicia (Acts 11:19) started the work here. Paul went also through Phoenicia on the way to the Jerusalem Conference (Acts 15:3). As at Troas and Miletus, so here Paul's indefatigable energy shows itself with characteristic zeal. Through the Spirit (dia tou pneumatos). The Holy Spirit undoubtedly who had already told Paul that bonds and afflictions awaited him in Jerusalem (Acts 20:23). That he should not set foot in Jerusalem (mê epibainein eis Ierosoluma). Indirect command with mê and the present active infinitive, not to keep on going to Jerusalem (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1046). In spite of this warning Paul felt it his duty as before (Acts 20:22) to go on. Evidently Paul interpreted the action of the Holy Spirit as information and warning although the disciples at Tyre gave it the form of a prohibition. Duty called louder than warning to Paul even if both were the calls of God.

Verse 5

That we had accomplished the days (exartisai hêmâs tas hêmeras). First aorist active infinitive of exartizô, to furnish perfectly, rare in ancient writers, but fairly frequent in the papyri. Only twice in the N.T., here and 2Ti 3:17. Finish the exact number of days (seven) of verse Acts 21:4. The accusative of general reference hêmâs is the usual construction and the infinitive clause is the subject of egeneto. We departed and went on our journey (exelthontes eporeuometha). Sharp distinction between the first aorist active participle exelthontes (from exerchomai, to go out) and the imperfect middle eporeuometha from poreuô (we were going on). And they all, with wives and children, brought us on our way (propempontôn hêmâs pantôn sun gunaixi kai teknois). No "and" in the Greek, simply genitive absolute, "They all with wives and children accompanying us," just as at Miletus (Acts 20:28), same verb propempô which see. The first mention of children in connection with the apostolic churches (Vincent). Vivid picture here as at Miletus, evident touch of an eyewitness. Till we were out of the city (heôs exô tês poleôs). Note both adverbial prepositions (heôs exô) clear outside of the city.

Verse 6

Beach (aigialon). As in Mat 13:2 which see. This scene is in public as at Miletus, but they did not care. Bade each other farewell (apespasametha allélous). First aorist middle of apaspazomai. Rare compound, here alone in the N.T. Tender scene, but "no bonds of long comradeship, none of the clinging love" (Furneaux) seen at Miletus (Acts 20:37). Home again (eis ta idia). To their own places as of the Beloved Disciple in John 19:27 and of Jesus in John 1:11. This idiom in the papyri also.

Verse 7

Had finished (dianusantes). First aorist active participle of dianuô, old verb to accomplish (anuô) thoroughly (dia), only here in the N.T. From Tyre (apo Turou). Page takes (Hackett also) with katéntêsamen (we arrived) rather than with "ton ploun" (the voyage) and with good reason: "And we, having (thereby) finished the voyage, arrived from Tyre at Ptolemais." Ptolemais is the modern Acre, called Accho in Jdg 1:31. The harbour is the best on the coast of Palestine and is surrounded by mountains. It is about thirty miles south of Tyre. It was never taken by Israel and was considered a Philistine town and the Greeks counted it a Phoenician city. It was the key to the road down the coast between Syria and Egypt and had successively the rule of the Ptolemies, Syrians, Romans. Saluted (aspasamenoï). Here greeting as in Acts 21:19 rather than farewell as in Acts 20:1. The stay was short, one day (hêmeran mian, accusative), but "the brethren" Paul and his party found easily. Possibly the scattered brethren (Acts 11:19) founded the church here or Philip may have done it.

Verse 8

On the morrow (têi epaurion). Another and the more common way of expressing this idea of "next day" besides the three in Acts 20:15 and the one in Acts 21:1. Unto Caesarea (eis Kaisarian). Apparently by land as the voyage (ploun) ended at Ptolemais (verse Acts 21:7). Caesarea is the political capital of Judea under the Romans where the procurators lived and a city of importance, built by Herod the Great and named in honour of Augustus. It had a magnificent harbour built Most of the inhabitants were Greeks. This is the third time that we have seen Paul in Caesarea, on his journey from Jerusalem to Tarsus (Acts 9:30), on his return from Antioch at the close of the second mission tour (Acts 18:22) and now. The best MSS. omit hoi peri Paulou (we that were of Paul's company) a phrase like that in Acts 13:13. Into the house of Philip the evangelist (eis ton oikon Philippou tou euaggelistou). Second in the list of the seven (Acts 6:5) after Stephen and that fact mentioned here. By this title he is distinguished from "Philip the apostle," one of the twelve. His evangelistic work followed the death of Stephen (Acts 8:1-40) in Samaria, Philistia, with his home in Caesarea. The word "evangelizing" (euêggelizeto) was used of him in Acts 8:40. The earliest of the three N.T. examples of the word "evangelist" (Acts 21:8; Eph 4:11; 2Ti 4:5). Apparently a word used to describe one who told the gospel story as Philip did and may have been used of him first of all as John was termed "the baptizer" (ho baptizôn, Mark 1:4), then "the Baptist" (ho baptistês, Mat 3:1). It is found on an inscription in one of the Greek islands of uncertain date and was used in ecclesiastical writers of later times on the Four Gospels as we do. As used here the meaning is a travelling missionary who "gospelized" communities. This is probably Paul's idea in 2Ti 4:5. In Eph 4:11 the word seems to describe a special class of ministers just as we have them today. Men have different gifts and Philip had this of evangelizing as Paul was doing who is the chief evangelist. The ideal minister today combines the gifts of evangelist, herald, teacher, shepherd. "We abode with him" (emeinamen par' autôi). Constativ aorist active indicative. Par autôi (by his side) is a neat idiom for "at his house." What a joyful time Paul had in conversation with Philip. He could learn from him much of value about the early days of the gospel in Jerusalem. And Luke could, and probably did, take notes from Philip and his daughters about the beginnings of Christian history. It is generally supposed that the "we" sections of Acts represent a travel document by Luke (notes made by him as he journeyed from Troas to Rome). Those who deny the Lukan authorship of the whole book usually admit this. So we may suppose that Luke is already gathering data for future use. If so, these were precious days for him.

Verse 9

Virgins which did prophesy (parthenoi prophêteusai). Not necessarily an "order" of virgins, but Philip had the honour of having in his home four virgin daughters with the gift of prophecy which was not necessarily predicting events, though that was done as by Agabus here. It was more than ordinary preaching (cf. Acts 19:6) and was put by Paul above the other gifts like tongues (1Co 14:1-33). The prophecy of Joel (Joel 2:28) about their sons and daughters prophesying is quoted by Peter and applied to the events on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:17). Paul in 1Co 11:5 gives directions about praying and prophesying by the women (apparently in public worship) with the head uncovered and sharply requires the head covering, though not forbidding the praying and prophesying. With this must be compared his demand for silence by the women in 1Co 14:34-40; 1Ti 2:8-15 which it is not easy to reconcile. One wonders if there was not something known to Paul about special conditions in Corinth and Ephesus that he has not told. There was also Anna the prophetess in the temple (Luke 2:36) besides the inspired hymns of Elizabeth (Luke 1:42-45) and of Mary (Luke 1:46-55). At any rate there was no order of women prophets or official ministers. There were Old Testament prophetesses like Miriam, Deborah, Huldah. Today in our Sunday schools the women do most of the actual teaching. The whole problem is difficult and calls for restraint and reverence. One thing is certain and that is that Luke appreciated the services of women for Christ as is shown often in his writings (Luke 8:1-3, for instance) before this incident.

Verse 10

As we tarried (epimenontôn hêmôn). Genitive absolute. Note epi (additional) with menô as in Acts 12:16. Many days (hêmeras pleious). More days (than we expected), accusative of time. A certain prophet named Agabus (prophêtês onomati Agabos). A prophet like the daughters of Philip, mentioned already in connection with the famine predicted by him (Acts 11:28), but apparently not a man of prominence like Barnabas, and so no allusion to that former prophecy.

Verse 11

Coming (elthôn, second aorist active participle of erchomai), taking (aras, first aorist active participle of airô, to take up), binding (dêsas, first aorist active participle of deô, to bind). Vivid use of three successive participles describing the dramatic action of Agabus. Paul's girdle (tên zônên tou Paulou). Old word from zônnumi, to gird. See on Acts 12:8. His own feet and hands (heautou tous podas kai tas cheiras). Basis for the interpretation. Old Testament prophets often employed symbolic deeds (1Ki 22:11; Jas 2:2; Jer 13:1-7; Ezek 4:1-6). Jesus interpreted the symbolism of Peter's girding himself (John 21:18). So (houtôs). As Agabus had bound himself. Agabus was just from Jerusalem and probably knew the feeling there against Paul. At any rate the Holy Spirit revealed it to him as he claims. Shall deliver (paradôsousin). Like the words of Jesus about himself (Mat 20:19). He was "delivered" into the hands of the Gentiles and it took five years to get out of those hands.

Verse 12

Both we and they of that place (hêmeis te kai hoi entopioi). Usual use of te kai (both--and). Entopioi, old word, only here in N.T. Not to go up (tou mê anabainein). Probably ablative of the articular present active infinitive with redundant negative me after parekaloumen (imperfect active, conative). We tried to persuade him from going up. It can be explained as genitive, but not so likely: We tried to persuade him in respect to not going up. Vincent cites the case of Regulus who insisted on returning from Rome to Carthage to certain death and that of Luther on the way to the Diet of Worms. Spalatin begged Luther not to go on. Luther said: "Though devils be as many in Worms as tiles upon the roofs, yet thither will I go." This dramatic warning of Agabus came on top of that in Tyre (Acts 21:4) and Paul's own confession in Miletus (Acts 20:23). It is small wonder that Luke and the other messengers together with Philip and his daughters (prophetesses versus prophet?) joined in a chorus of dissuasion to Paul.

Verse 13

What are you doing weeping? (Ti poieite klaiontes?) Strong protest as in Mark 11:5. Breaking my heart (sunthruptontes mou tên kardian). The verb sunthruptô, to crush together, is late Koin, for apothruptô, to break off, both vivid and expressive words. So to enervate and unman one, weakening Paul's determination to go on with his duty. I am ready (Egô hetoimôs echô). I hold (myself) in readiness (adverb, hetoimôs). Same idiom in 2Co 12:14. Not only to be bound (ou monon dethênai). First aorist passive infinitive of deô and note ou monon rather than mê monon, the usual negative of the infinitive because of the sharp contrast (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1095). Paul's readiness to die, if need be, at Jerusalem is like that of Jesus on the way to Jerusalem the last time. Even before that Luke (Luke 9:51) said that "he set his face to go on to Jerusalem." Later the disciples will say to Jesus, "Master, the Jews were but now seeking to stone thee; and goest thou thither?" (John 11:8). The stature of Paul rises here to heroic proportions "for the name of the Lord Jesus" (huper tou onomatos tou kuriou Iêsou).

Verse 14

When he would not be persuaded (mê peithomenou autou). Genitive absolute of the present passive participle of peithô. Literally, "he not being persuaded." That was all. Paul's will (kardia) was not broken, not even bent. We ceased (hêsuchasamen). Ingressive aorist active indicative of hêsuchazô, old verb to be quiet, silent. The will of the Lord be done (tou kuriou to thelêma ginesthô). Present middle imperative of ginomai. There is a quaint naivete in this confession by the friends of Paul. Since Paul would not let them have their way, they were willing for the Lord to have his way, acquiescence after failure to have theirs.

Verse 15

We took up our baggage (episkeuasamenoi). First aorist middle participle of episkeuazô, old verb to furnish (skeuos, epi) with things necessary, to pack up, saddle horses here Ramsay holds. Here only in the N.T. Went up (anabainomen). Inchoative imperfect active of anabainô, we started to go up.

Verse 16

Certain of the disciples (tôn mathêton). The genitive here occurs with tines understood as often in the Greek idiom, the partitive genitive used as nominative (Robertson, Grammar, p. 502). Bringing (agontes). Nominative plural participle agreeing with tines understood, not with case of mathêton. One Mnason of Cyprus, an early disciple, with whom we should lodge (par hôi xenisthōmen Mnasōni tini Kupriōi archaiōi mathêtēi). A thoroughly idiomatic Greek idiom, incorporation and attraction of the antecedent into the relative clause (Robertson, Grammar, p. 718). Mnasōni is really the object of agontes or the accusative with para or pros understood and should be accusative, but it is placed in the clause after the relative and in the same locative case with the relative hôi (due to par', beside, with). Then the rest agrees in case with Mnasōni. He was originally from Cyprus, but now in Caesarea. The Codex Bezae adds eis tina kômên (to a certain village) and makes it mean that they were to lodge with Mnason at his home there about halfway to Jerusalem. This may be true. The use of the subjunctive xenisthōmen (first aorist passive of xenizō, to entertain strangers as in Acts 10:6, 23, 32 already) may be volitive of purpose with the relative (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 955, 989). The use of archaiōi for "early" may refer to the fact that he was one of the original disciples at Pentecost as Peter in Acts 15:7 uses hēmerōn archaiōn (early days) to refer to his experience at Caesarea in Acts 10:24-48. "As the number of the first disciples lessened, the next generation accorded a sort of honour to the survivors" (Furneaux).

Verse 17

When we were come (genomenōn hēmōn). Genitive absolute again, "we having come." Received (apedexanto). Apodechomai, to receive from. This old compound only in Luke in the N.T. Gladly (asmenōs). Old adverb hēsmenōs from hēdomai, to be pleased. Here only in the N.T. Perhaps this first glad welcome was from Paul's personal friends in Jerusalem.

Verse 18

The day following (tēi epiousēi). As in Acts 20:15 which see. Went in (eisēiei). Imperfect active of eiseimi, old classic verb used only four times in the N.T. (Acts 3:3; Acts 21:18, 26; Heb 9:6), a mark of the literary style rather than the colloquial Koin, use of eiserchomai. Together with us to James (sun hêmin pros Iakôbon). So then Luke is present. The next use of "we" is in Acts 27:1 when they leave Caesarea for Rome, but it is not likely that Luke was away from Paul in Jerusalem and Caesarea. The reports of what was done and said in both places is so full and minute that it seems reasonable that Luke got first hand information here whatever his motive was for so full an account of these legal proceedings to be discussed later. There are many details that read like an eye witness's story (Acts 21:30, 35, 40; Acts 22:2, 3; Acts 23:12, etc.). It was probably the house of James (pros and para so used often). And all the elders were present (pantes te paregenonto hoi presbuteroi). Clearly James is the leading elder and the others are his guests in a formal reception to Paul. It is noticeable that the apostles are not mentioned, though both elders and apostles are named at the Conference in chapter 15. It would seem that the apostles are away on preaching tours. The whole church was not called together probably because of the known prejudice against Paul created by the Judaizers.

Verse 19

He rehearsed (exêgeito). Imperfect middle of exêgeomai, old verb to lead out, to draw out in narrative, to recount. So Paul is pictured as taking his time for he had a great story to tell of what had happened since they saw him last. One by one (kath' hena hekaston). According to each one (item) and the adverbial phrase used as an accusative after the verb exêgeito as Demosthenes does (1265), though it could be like kath' hena hekastos in Eph 5:33. Which (hôn). Genitive attracted from ha (accusative) into the case of the unexpressed antecedent toutôn. God had wrought (epoiêsen ho theos). Summary constative aorist active indicative that gathers up all that God did and he takes pains to give God the glory. It is possible that at this formal meeting Paul observed an absence of warmth and enthusiasm in contrast with the welcome accorded by his friends the day before (verse Acts 21:17). Furneaux thinks that Paul was coldly received on this day in spite of the generous offering brought from the Gentile Christians. "It looks as though his misgiving as to its reception (Rom 15:31) was confirmed. Nor do we hear that the Christians of Jerusalem later put in so much as a word on his behalf with either the Jewish or the Roman authorities, or expressed any sympathy with him during his long imprisonment at Caesarea" (Furneaux). The most that can be said is that the Judaizers referred to by James do not appear actively against him. The collection and the plan proposed by James accomplished that much at any rate. It stopped the mouths of those lions.

Glorified (edoxazon). Inchoative imperfect, began to glorify God, though without special praise of Paul. How many thousands (posai muriades). Old word for ten thousand (Acts 19:19) and then an indefinite number like our "myriads" (this very word) as Luke 12:1; Acts 21:20; Jude 1:14; Rev 5:11; Rev 9:16. But it is a surprising statement even with allowable hyperbole, but one may recall Acts 4:4 (number of the men--not women--about five thousand); Acts 5:14 (multitudes both of men and women); Acts 6:7. There were undoubtedly a great many thousands of believers in Jerusalem and all Jewish Christians, some, alas, Judaizers (Acts 11:2; Acts 15:1, 5). This list may include the Christians from neighbouring towns in Palestine and even some from foreign countries here at the Feast of Pentecost, for it is probable that Paul arrived in time for it as he had hoped. But we do not have to count the hostile Jews from Asia (verse Acts 21:27) who were clearly not Christians at all. All zealous for the law (pantes zêlôtai tou nomou). Zealots (substantive) rather than zealous (adjective) with objective genitive (tou nomou). The word zealot is from zêloô, to burn with zeal, to boil. The Greek used zêlôtês for an imitator or admirer. There was a party of Zealots (developed from the Pharisees), a group of what would be called "hot-heads," who brought on the war with Rome. One of this party, Simon Zelotes (Acts 1:13), was in the number of the twelve apostles. It is important to understand the issues in Jerusalem. It was settled at the Jerusalem Conference (Acts 15:1-22; Gal 2:1-10) that the Mosaic ceremonial law was not to be imposed upon Gentile Christians. Paul won freedom for them, but it was not said that it was wrong for Jewish Christians to go on observing it if they wished. We have seen Paul observing the passover in Philippi (Acts 20:6) and planning to reach Jerusalem for Pentecost (Acts 20:16). The Judaizers rankled under Paul's victory and power in spreading the gospel among the Gentiles and gave him great trouble in Galatia and Corinth. They were busy against him in Jerusalem also and it was to undo the harm done by them in Jerusalem that Paul gathered the great collection from the Gentile Christians and brought it with him and the delegates from the churches. Clearly then Paul had real ground for his apprehension of trouble in Jerusalem while still in Corinth (Rom 15:25) when he asked for the prayers of the Roman Christians (verses Acts 21:30-32). The repeated warnings along the way were amply justified.

Verse 21

They have been informed concerning thee (katêchêthêsan peri sou). First aorist passive indicative of katêcheô. A word in the ancient Greek, but a few examples survive in the papyri. It means to sound (echo, from êchô, our word) down (kata), to resound, re-echo, to teach orally. Oriental students today (Arabs learning the Koran) often study aloud. In the N.T. only in Luke 1:4 which see; Acts 18:25; Acts 21:21; 1Co 14:19; Gal 6:6; Rom 2:18. This oral teaching about Paul was done diligently by the Judaizers who had raised trouble against Peter (Acts 11:2) and Paul (Acts 15:1, 5). They had failed in their attacks on Paul's world campaigns. Now they try to undermine him at home. In Paul's long absence from Jerusalem, since Acts 18:22, they have had a free hand, save what opposition James would give, and have had great success in prejudicing the Jerusalem Christians against Paul. So James, in the presence of the other elders and probably at their suggestion, feels called upon to tell Paul the actual situation. That thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses (hoti apostasian didaskeis apo Môuseôs tous kata ta ethnê pantas Ioudaious). Two accusatives with didaskeis (verb of teaching) according to rule. Literally, "That thou art teaching all the Jews among (kata) the Gentiles (the Jews of the dispersion as in Acts 2:9) apostasy from Moses." That is the point, the dreadful word apostasian (our apostasy), a late form (I Macc. 2:15) for the earlier apostasis (cf. 2Th 2:3 for apostasia). "In the eyes of the church at Jerusalem this was a far more serious matter than the previous question at the Conference about the status of Gentile converts" (Furneaux). Paul had brought that issue to the Jerusalem Conference because of the contention of the Judaizers. But here it is not the Judaizers, but the elders of the church with James as their spokesman on behalf of the church as a whole. They do not believe this false charge, but they wish Paul to set it straight. Paul had made his position clear in his Epistles (I Corinthians, Galatians, Romans) for all who cared to know. Telling them not to circumcise their children (legôn mê peritemnein autous ta tekna). The participle legôn agrees with "thou" (Paul), the subject of didaskeis. This is not indirect assertion, but indirect command, hence the negative mê instead of ou with the infinitive (Robertson, Grammar, p.1046). The point is not that Paul stated what the Jewish Christians in the dispersion do, but that he says that they (autous accusative of general reference) are not to go on circumcising (peritemnein, present active infinitive) their children. Paul taught the very opposite (1Co 7:18) and had Timothy circumcised (Acts 16:3) because he was half Jew and half Greek. His own practice is stated in 1Co 9:19 ("to the Jews as a Jew"). Neither to walk after the customs (mêde tois ethesin peripatein). Locative case with infinitive peripatein. The charge was here enlarged to cover it all and to make Paul out an enemy of Jewish life and teachings. That same charge had been made against Stephen when young Saul (Paul) was the leader (Acts 6:14): "Will change the customs (ethê the very word used here) which Moses delivered unto us." It actually seemed that some of the Jews cared more for Moses than for God (Acts 6:11). So much for the charge of the Judaizers.

Verse 22

What is it therefore? (Ti oun estin?). See this form of question by Paul (1Co 14:15, 26). What is to be done about it? Clearly James and the elders do not believe these misrepresentations of Paul's teaching, but many do. They will certainly hear (pantôs akousontai). Pantôs is old adverb, by all means, altogether, wholly, certainly as here and Acts 28:4; Luke 4:23; 1Co 9:10. This future middle of akouô is the usual form instead of akousô. There was no way to conceal Paul's arrival nor was it wise to do so. B C and several cursives omit dei plêthos sunelthein (The multitude must needs come together).

Verse 23

Do therefore this (touto oun poiêson). The elders had thought out a plan of procedure by which Paul could set the whole matter straight. We have (eisin hêmin). "There are to us" (dative of possession as in Acts 18:10). Apparently members of the Jerusalem church. Which have a vow on them (euchên echontes aph'-- or eph' heautôn). Apparently a temporary Nazarite vow like that in Num 6:1-21 and its completion was marked by several offerings in the temple, the shaving of the head (Num 6:13-15). Either Paul or Aquila had such a vow on leaving Cenchreae (Acts 18:18). "It was considered a work of piety to relieve needy Jews from the expenses connected with this vow, as Paul does here" (Page). The reading aph' heautôn would mean that they had taken the vow voluntarily or of themselves (Luke 12:57; 2Co 3:5), while eph' heautôn means that the vow lies on them still.

Verse 24

These take (toutous paralabôn). Second aorist active participle of paralambanô. Taking these alone. Purify thyself with them (hagnisthêti sun autois). First aorist passive imperative of hagnizô, old verb to purify, to make pure (hagnos). See the active voice in Jas 4:8; 1Pe 1:22; 1Jn 3:3. It is possible to see the full passive force here, "Be purified." But a number of aorist passives in the Koin, supplant the aorist middle forms and preserve the force of the middle (Robertson, Grammar, p. 819). That is possible here. Hence, "Purify thyself" is allowable. The word occurs in Num 6:1 for taking the Nazarite vow. The point is that Paul takes the vow with them. Note hagnismou in verse Acts 21:26. Be at charges for them (dapanêson ep' autois). First aorist active imperative of old verb dapanaô, to incur expense, expend. Spend (money) upon (ep') them. Ramsay (St. Paul the Traveller, etc., p. 310) argues that Paul had use of considerable money at this period, perhaps from his father's estate. The charges for five men would be considerable. "A poor man would not have been treated with the respect paid him at Caesarea, on the voyage, and at Rome" (Furneaux). That they may shave their heads (hina xurêsontai tên kephalên). Note tên kephalên, the head (singular). Future middle indicative of xuraô, late form for the old xureô, to shave, middle to shave oneself or (causative) to get oneself shaved. This use of hina with the future indicative is like the classic hopôs with the future indicative and is common in the N.T. as in the Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, p. 984). And all shall know (kai gnôsontai). This future middle indicative of ginôskô (cf. akousontai in verse Acts 21:22) may be independent of hina or dependent on it like xurêsontai, though some MSS. (H L P) have gnôsin (second aorist subjunctive, clearly dependent on hina). Of which (hôn). Genitive plural of the relative ha (accusative) object of the perfect passive verb katêchêntai (cf. verse Acts 21:21 katêchêthêsan) attracted into the case of the omitted antecedent toutôn. The instruction still in effect. But that thou thyself walkest orderly (alla stoicheis kai autos). Stoicheis is an old verb to go in a row (from stoichos, row, rank, series), to walk in a line or by rule. In the N.T. only here and Gal 5:25; Rom 4:12; Php 3:16. The rule is the law and Paul was not a sidestepper. The idea of the verb is made plain by the participle phulassôn ton nomon (keeping or observing the law).

Verse 25

We wrote (epesteilamen). First aorist active of epistellô, to send to and so to write like our epistle (epistolê). Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Acts 15:20; Heb 13:22. It is the very word used by James in this "judgment" at the Conference (Acts 15:20, episteilai). B D here read apesteilamen from apostellô, to send away, to give orders. Wendt and Schuerer object to this as a gloss. Rather is it an explanation by James that he does not refer to the Gentile Christians whose freedom from the Mosaic ceremonial law was guaranteed at the Jerusalem Conference. James himself presided at that Conference and offered the resolution that was unanimously adopted. James stands by that agreement and repeats the main items (four: anything sacrificed to idols, blood, anything strangled, fornication, for discussion see Acts 15:1ff.) from which they are to keep themselves (direct middle phulassesthai of phulassô, indirect command after krinantes with accusative, autous, of general reference). James has thus again cleared the air about the Gentiles who have believed (pepisteukotôn, perfect active participle genitive plural of pisteuô). He asks that Paul will stand by the right of Jewish Christians to keep on observing the Mosaic law. He has put the case squarely and fairly.

Verse 26

Took the men (paralabôn tous andras). The very phrase used in verse Acts 21:24 to Paul. The next day (têi echomenêi). One of the phrases in Acts 20:15 for the coming day. Locative case of time. Purifying himself with them (sun autois hagnistheis, first aorist passive participle of hagnizô). The precise language again of the recommendation in verse Acts 21:24. Paul was conforming to the letter. Went into the temple (eisêiei eis to hieron). Imperfect active of eiseimi as in verse Acts 21:18 which see. Went on into the temple, descriptive imperfect. Paul joined the four men in their vow of separation. Declaring (diaggellôn). To the priests what day he would report the fulfilment of the vow. The priests would desire notice of the sacrifice. This verb only used by Luke in N.T. except Rom 11:17 (quotation from the LXX). It is not necessary to assume that the vows of each of the five expired on the same day (Rackham). Until the offering was offered for every one of them (heôs hou prosênechthê huper henos hekastou autôn hê prosphora). This use of heôs hou (like heôs, alone) with the first aorist passive indicative prosênechthê of prospherô, to offer, contemplates the final result (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 974) and is probably the statement of Luke added to Paul's announcement. He probably went into the temple one day for each of the brethren and one for himself. The question arises whether Paul acted wisely or unwisely in agreeing to the suggestion of James. What he did was in perfect harmony with his principle of accommodation in 1Co 9:20 when no principle was involved. It is charged that here on this occasion Paul was unduly influenced by considerations of expediency and was willing for the Jewish Christians to believe him more of a Jew than was true in order to placate the situation in Jerusalem. Furneaux calls it a compromise and a failure. I do not so see it. To say that is to obscure the whole complex situation. What Paul did was not for the purpose of conciliating his opponents, the Judaizers, who had diligently spread falsehoods about him in Jerusalem as in Corinth. It was solely to break the power of these "false apostles" over the thousands in Jerusalem who have been deluded by Paul's accusers.

So far as the evidence goes that thing was accomplished. In the trouble that comes in Jerusalem and Caesarea the Judaizers cut no figure at all. The Jewish Christians do not appear in Paul's behalf, but there was no opportunity for them to do so. The explosion that came on the last day of Paul's appearance in the temple was wholly disconnected from his offerings for the four brethren and himself. It must be remembered that Paul had many kinds of enemies. The attack on him by these Jews from Asia had no connexion whatever with the slanders of the Judaizers about Paul's alleged teachings that Jewish Christians in the dispersion should depart from the Mosaic law. That slander was put to rest forever by his following the advice of James and justifies the wisdom of that advice and Paul's conduct about it.

Verse 27

The seven days (hai hepta hēmerai). For which Paul had taken the vow, though there may be an allusion to the pentecostal week for which Paul had desired to be present (Acts 20:16). There is no necessary connexion with the vow in Acts 18:15. In Acts 24:17 Paul makes a general reference to his purpose in coming to Jerusalem to bring alms and offerings (prosphoras, sacrifices). Paul spent seven days in Troas (Acts 20:6), Tyre (Acts 21:4), and had planned for seven here if not more. It was on the last of the seven days when Paul was completing his offerings about the vows on all five that the incident occurred that was to make him a prisoner for five years.

When they saw him in the temple (theasamenoi auton en tōi hierōi). First aorist middle participle of theaomai (from thea, a view, cf. theatre) to behold. In the very act of honouring the temple these Jews from Asia raise a hue and cry that he is dishonouring it. Paul was not known by face now to many of the Jerusalem Jews, though once the leader of the persecution after the death of Stephen and the outstanding young Jew of the day. But the Jews in Ephesus knew him only too well, some of whom are here at the pentecostal feast. They had plotted against him in Ephesus to no purpose (Acts 19:23-41; Acts 20:19), but now a new opportunity had come. It is possible that the cry was led by Alexander put forward by the Jews in Ephesus (Acts 19:33) who may be the same as Alexander the coppersmith who did Paul so much harm (2Ti 4:14). Paul was not in the inner sanctuary (ho naos), but only in the outer courts (to hieron). Stirred up all the multitude (sunecheon panta ton ochlon). Imperfect (kept on) active of suncheô or sunchunô (-unnô), to pour together, to confuse as in Acts 2:6; Acts 9:22; Acts 19:31, 32; Acts 21:31 and here to stir up by the same sort of confusion created by Demetrius in Ephesus where the same word is used twice (Acts 19:31, 32). The Jews from Ephesus had learned it from Demetrius the silversmith. Laid hands on him (epebalan ep' auton tas cheiras). Second aorist (ingressive, with endings of the first aorist, -an) active indicative of epiballô, old verb to lay upon, to attack (note repetition of epi). They attacked and seized Paul before the charge was made.

Verse 28

Help (boêtheite). Present active imperative of boêtheô, to run (theô) at a cry (boê), as if an outrage had been committed like murder or assault. All men everywhere (panta pantachêi). Alliterative. Pantachêi is a variation in MSS., often pantachou, and here only in the N.T. The charges against Paul remind one of those against Stephen (Acts 6:13) in which Paul had participated according to his confession (Acts 22:20). Like the charges against Stephen and Jesus before him truth and falsehood are mixed. Paul had said that being a Jew would not save a man. He had taught the law of Moses was not binding on Gentiles. He did hold, like Jesus and Stephen, that the temple was not the only place to worship God. But Paul gloried himself in being a Jew, considered the Mosaic law righteous for Jews, and was honouring the temple at this very moment. And moreover also he brought Greeks also into the temple (eti te kai Hellênas eisêgagen eis to hieron). Note the three particles (eti te kai), and (te) still more (eti) also or even (kai). Worse than his teaching (didaskôn) is his dreadful deed: he actually brought (eisêgagen, second aorist active indicative of eisagô). This he had a right to do if they only went into the court of the Gentiles. But these Jews mean to imply that Paul had brought Greeks beyond this court into the court of Israel. An inscription was found by Clermont-Ganneau in Greek built into the walls of a mosque on the Via Dolorosa that was on the wall dividing the court of Israel from the court of the Gentiles. Death was the penalty to any Gentile who crossed over into the Court of Israel (The Athenaeum, July, 1871). Hath defiled this holy place (kekoinōken ton hagion topon touton). Present perfect active of koinoō, to make common (see on Acts 10:14). Note vivid change of tense, the defilement lasts (state of completion). All this is the substance of the call of these shrewd conspirators from Ephesus, Jews (not Jewish Christians, not even Judaizers) who hated him for his work there and who probably "spoke evil of the Way before the multitude" there so that Paul had to separate the disciples from the synagogue and go to the School of Tyrannus (Acts 19:9). These enemies of Paul had now raised the cry of "fire" and vanish from the scene completely (Acts 24:19). This charge was absolutely false as we shall see, made out of inferences of hate and suspicion.

Verse 29

For (gar). Luke adds the reason for the wild charges made against Paul. They had before seen (ēsan proeōrakotes). Periphrastic past perfect of prooraō, old verb to see before, whether time or place. Only twice in the N.T., here and Acts 2:25 quoted from Ps 15:8. Note the double reduplication in -eō- as in Attic (Robertson, Grammar, p. 364). With him in the city Trophimus the Ephesian (Trophimon ton Ephesion en tēi polei sun autōi). The Jews from Asia (Ephesus) knew Trophimus by sight as well as Paul. One day they saw both of them together (sun) in the city. That was a fact. They had just seized Paul in the temple (hieron). That was another fact. They supposed (enomizon). Imperfect active of nomizō, common to think or suppose. Perfectly harmless word, but they did, as so many people do, put their supposed inference on the same basis with the facts. They did not see Trophimus with Paul now in the temple, nor had they ever seen him there. They simply argued that, if Paul was willing to be seen down street with a Greek Christian, he would not hesitate to bring him (therefore, did bring him, eisēgagen as in verse Acts 21:28) into the temple, that is into the court of Israel and therefore both Paul and Trophimus were entitled to death, especially Paul who had brought him in (if he had) and, besides, they now had Paul. This is the way of the mob-mind in all ages. Many an innocent man has been rushed to his death by the fury of a lynching party.

Verse 30

All the city was shaken (ekinêthê hê polis holê). First aorist passive of kineô, common verb for violent motion and emotion. See also Acts 24:5 where the word is used by Tertullus of Paul as the stirrer up of riots! The people ran together (egeneto sundromê tou laou). Rather, There came a running together (sun-dromê from sun-trechô) of the people. The cry spread like wildfire over the city and there was a pell-mell scramble or rush to get to the place of the disturbance. They laid hold on Paul (epilabomenoi tou Paulou). Second aorist middle participle of epilambanomai with the genitive (cf. epebalan in verse Acts 21:27). Dragged (heilikon). Imperfect active of helkô (and also helkuô), old verb to drag or draw. Imperfect tense vividly pictures the act as going on. They were saving the temple by dragging Paul outside. Curiously enough both epilabomenoi and heilkusan occur in Acts 16:19 about the arrest of Paul and Silas in Philippi. Straightway the doors were shut (eutheôs ekleisthêsan hai thurai). With a bang and at once. First aorist (effective) passive of kleiô. The doors between the inner court and the court of the Gentiles. But this was only the beginning, the preparation for the real work of the mob. They did not wish to defile the holy place with blood. The doors were shut by the Levites.

Verse 31

As they were seeking to kill him (zêtountôn autôn). Genitive absolute of zêteô, to seek, without autôn (they). This was their real purpose. Tidings (phasis). From phainô, to show. Old word for the work of informers and then the exposure of secret crime. In LXX. Here only in the N.T. Came up (anebê). Naturally in the wild uproar. The Roman guard during festivals was kept stationed in the Tower of Antonia at the northwest corner of the temple overlooking the temple and connected by stairs (verse Acts 21:35). To the chief captain (tôi chiliarchôi). Commander of a thousand men or cohort (Mark 15:16). His name was Claudius Lysias. Of the band (tês speirês). Each legion had six tribunes and so each tribune (chiliarch) had a thousand if the cohort had its full quota. See on Acts 10:1; Acts 27:1. The word is the Latin spira (anything rolled up). Note the genitive speirês instead of speiras (Attic). Was in confusion (sunchunnetai). Present passive indicative of sunchunnô (see verse Acts 21:27, sunecheon). This is what the conspirators had desired.

Verse 32

Forthwith (exautês). Common in the Koin, (ex autês, supply hôras, hour). He took (paralabôn). See verses Acts 21:24, 26. Centurions (hekatontarchas). See on Luke 7:2 for discussion. Plural shows that Lysias the chiliarch took several hundred soldiers along (a centurion with each hundred). Ran down (katedramen). Effective second aorist active indicative of katatrechô. From the tower of Antonia, vivid scene. And they (hoi de). Demonstrative use of hoi. The Jewish mob who had begun the work of killing Paul (verse Acts 21:31). Left off beating Paul (epausanto tuptontes ton Paulon). The participle with pauomai describes what they were already doing, the supplementary participle (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1121). They stopped before the job was over because of the sudden onset of the Roman soldiers. Some ten years before in a riot at the passover the Roman guard marched down and in the panic several hundred were trampled to death.

Verse 33

Came near (eggisas). First aorist active participle of eggizô, to draw near, Koin, verb from eggus, near, and common in the N.T. Laid hold on him (epelabeto antou). See same verb in verse Acts 21:30. To be bound (dethênai). First aorist passive infinitive of deô (see verse Acts 21:11). With two chains (halusesi dusi). Instrumental case of halusis, old word from a privative and luô (not loosing, i.e. chaining). With two chains as a violent and seditious person, probably leader of a band of assassins (verse Acts 21:38). See on Mark 5:4. Inquired (epunthaneto). Imperfect middle of punthanomai, old and common verb used mainly by Luke in the N.T. Lysias repeated his inquiries. Who he was (tis eiê). Present active optative of eimi changed from estin (present indicative) in the indirect question, a change not obligatory after a past tense, but often done in the older Greek, rare in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1043f.). And what he had done (kai ti estin pepoiêkôs). Periphrastic perfect active indicative of poieô here retained, not changed to the optative as is true of eiê from estin in the same indirect question, illustrating well the freedom about it.

Verse 34

Some shouting one thing, some another (alloi allo ti epephônoun). Same idiom of alloi allo as in Acts 19:32 which see. The imperfect of epiphôneô, to call out to, suits well the idiom. This old verb occurs in the N.T. only in Luke and Acts (already in Acts 12:22). When he could not know (mê dunamenou autou gnônai). Genitive absolute of present middle participle of dunamai with negative mê and second aorist active infinitive of ginôskô. The certainty (to asphales). Neuter articular adjective from a privative and sphallô, to make totter or fall. Old word, in the N.T. only in Acts 21:34; Acts 22:30; Acts 25:26; Php 3:1; Heb 6:19. Into the castle (eis tēn parembolēn). Koin, word from paremballô, to cast in by the side of, to assign soldiers a place, to encamp (see on Luke 19:43). So parembolē comes to mean an interpolation, then an army drawn up (Heb 11:34), but mainly an encampment (Heb 13:11, 13), frequent in Polybius and LXX. So here barracks of the Roman soldiers in the tower of Antonia as in verse Acts 21:37; Acts 22:24; Acts 23:10, 16, 32.

Verse 35

Upon the stairs (epi tous anabathmous). From ana, up, and bainô, to go. Late word, in LXX and Koin, writers. In the N.T. only here and verse Acts 21:40. So it was (sunebê). Second aorist active of sumbainô, to happen (see on Acts 20:19) with infinitive clause as subject here as often in the old Greek. He was borne (bastazesthai auton). Accusative of general reference with this subject infinitive, present passive of bastazô, to take up with the hands, literally as here. Violence (bian). See on Acts 5:26. Biazô, to use force, is from bia.

Verse 36

Followed after (êkolouthēi). Imperfect active of akoluthēô, was following. Cheated of their purpose to lynch Paul, they were determined to have his blood. Crying out (krazontes). Construction according to sense, plural masculine participle agreeing with neuter singular substantive plêthos (Robertson, Grammar, p. 401). Away with him (Aire auton). The very words used by the mob to Pilate when they chose Barabbas in preference to Jesus (Luke 23:18, Aire touton). He will hear it again from this same crowd (Acts 22:22). It is the present imperative (aire) as in Luke 23:18, but some may have used the urgent aorist active imperative as also in the case of Jesus John 19:15, âron, âron with staurôson added). Luke does not say that this mob demanded crucifixion for Paul. He was learning what it was to share the sufferings of Christ as the sullen roar of the mob's yells rolled on and on in his ears.

Verse 37

May I say something unto thee? (Ei exestin moi eipein ti pros se?). On this use of ei in a direct question see on Acts 1:6. The calm self-control of Paul in the presence of this mob is amazing. His courteous request to Lysias was in Greek to the chiliarch's amazement. Dost thou know Greek? (Hellênisti ginôskeis?). Old Greek adverb in -i from Hellênizô, meaning "in Greek." "Do you know it in Greek?" In the N.T. only here and John 19:20. Art thou not then the Egyptian? (Ouk ara su ei ho Aiguptios?). Expects the answer Yes and ara argues the matter (therefore). The well-known (ho) Egyptian who had given the Romans so much trouble. Stirred up to sedition (anastatôsas). First aorist active participle of anastatôô, a late verb from anastatos, outcast, and so to unsettle, to stir up, to excite, once known only in LXX and Acts 17:6 (which see); Acts 21:38; Gal 5:12, but now found in several papyri examples with precisely this sense to upset. Of the Assassins (tôn sikariôn). Latin word sicarius, one who carried a short sword sica under his cloak, a cutthroat. Josephus uses this very word for bands of robbers under this Egyptian (War II. 17,6 and 13,5; Ant. XX. 8,10). Josephus says that there were 30,000 who gathered on the Mount of Olives to see the walls of Jerusalem fall down and not merely 4,000 as Lysias does here. But Lysias may refer to the group that were armed thus (banditti) the core of the mob of 30,000. Lysias at once saw by Paul's knowledge of Greek that he was not the famous Egyptian who led the Assassins and escaped himself when Felix attacked and slew the most of them.

Verse 39

I am (Egô men eimi). In contrast with the wild guess of Lysias Paul uses men and de. He tells briefly who he is: a Jew (Ioudaios) by race, of Tarsus in Cilicia (Tarseus tês Kilikias) by country, belonging to Tarsus (this adjective Tarseus only here and Acts 9:11), and proud of it, one of the great cities of the empire with a great university. A citizen of no mean city (ouk asêmou poleôs politês). Litotes again, "no mean" (asêmos, old adjective, unmarked, a privative and sêma, mark, insignificant, here only in the N.T.). This same litotes used by Euripides of Athens (Ion 8). But Paul calls himself a citizen (politês) of Tarsus. Note the "effective assonance" (Page) in poleôs politês. Paul now (de) makes his request (deomai) of Lysias. Give me leave (epitrepson moi). First aorist active imperative of epitrepô, old and common verb to turn to, to permit, to allow. It was a strange request and a daring one, to wish to speak to this mob howling for Paul's blood.

Verse 40

When he had given him leave (epitrepsantos autou). Genitive absolute of aorist active participle of the same verb epitrepô. Standing on the stairs (hestôs epi tôn anabathmôn). Second perfect active participle of histêmi, to place, but intransitive to stand. Dramatic scene. Paul had faced many audiences and crowds, but never one quite like this. Most men would have feared to speak, but not so Paul. He will speak about himself only as it gives him a chance to put Christ before this angry Jewish mob who look on Paul as a renegade Jew, a turncoat, a deserter, who went back on Gamaliel and all the traditions of his people, who not only turned from Judaism to Christianity, but who went after Gentiles and treated Gentiles as if they were on a par with Jews. Paul knows only too well what this mob thinks of him. Beckoned with the hand (kateseise têi cheiri). He shook down to the multitude with the hand (instrumental case cheiri), while Alexander, Luke says (Acts 19:33), "shook down the hand" (accusative with the same verb, which see). In Acts 26:1 Paul reached out the hand (ekteinas tèn cheira). When there was made a great silence (pollês sigês genomenês). Genitive absolute again with second aorist middle participle of ginomai, "much silence having come." Paul waited till silence had come. In the Hebrew language (têi Ebraidi dialektôi). The Aramaean which the people in Jerusalem knew better than the Greek. Paul could use either tongue at will. His enemies had said in Corinth that "his bodily presence was weak and his speech contemptible" (2Co 10:10). But surely even they would have to admit that Paul's stature and words reach heroic proportions on this occasion. Self-possessed with majestic poise Paul faces the outraged mob beneath the stairs.

Brethren and fathers (Andres adelphoi kai pateres) Men, brethren, and fathers. The very language used by Stephen (Acts 7:2) when arraigned before the Sanhedrin with Paul then present. Now Paul faces a Jewish mob on the same charges brought against Stephen. These words are those of courtesy and dignity (amoris et honoris nomina, Page). These men were Paul's brother Jews and were (many of them) official representatives of the people (Sanhedrists, priests, rabbis). Paul's purpose is conciliatory, he employs "his ready tact" (Rackham). The defence which I now make unto you (mou tês pros humas nuni apologias). Literally, My defence to you at this time. Nuni is a sharpened form (by -i) of nun (now), just now. The term apologia (apology) is not our use of the word for apologizing for an offence, but the original sense of defence for his conduct, his life. It is an old word from apologeomai, to talk oneself off a charge, to make defence. It occurs also in Acts 25:16 and then also in 1Co 9:3; 2Co 7:11; Php 1:7, 16; 2Ti 4:16; 1Pe 3:15. Paul uses it again in Acts 25:16 as here about his defence against the charges made by the Jews from Asia. He is suspected of being a renegade from the Mosaic law and charged with specific acts connected with the alleged profanation of the temple. So Paul speaks in Aramaic and recites the actual facts connected with his change from Judaism to Christianity. The facts make the strongest argument. He first recounts the well-known story of his zeal for Judaism in the persecution of the Christians and shows why the change came. Then he gives a summary of his work among the Gentiles and why he came to Jerusalem this time. He answers the charge of enmity to the people and the law and of desecration of the temple. It is a speech of great skill and force, delivered under remarkable conditions. The one in chapter Acts 26:1ff covers some of the same ground, but for a slightly different purpose as we shall see. For a discussion of the three reports in Acts of Paul's conversion see chapter Acts 9:1ff. Luke has not been careful to make every detail correspond, though there is essential agreement in all three.

Verse 2

He spake (prosephônei). Imperfect active, was speaking. See aorist active prosephônêsen in Acts 21:40. They were the more quiet (mállon pareschon hêsuchian). Literally, The more (mállon) they furnished or supplied (second aorist active indicative of parechô) quietness (hêsuchian, old word, in the N.T. only here and 2Th 3:12; 1Ti 2:11). Precisely this idiom occurs in Plutarch (Cor. 18) and the LXX (Job 34:29). Knowling notes the fondness of Luke for words of silence (sigê, sigaô, hêsuchazô) as in Luke 14:4; Luke 15:26; Acts 11:18; Acts 12:17; Acts 15:12; Acts 21:14, 40. It is a vivid picture of the sudden hush that swept over the vast mob under the spell of the Aramaic. They would have understood Paul's Koin, Greek, but they much preferred the Aramaic. It was a masterstroke.

Verse 3

I am a Jew (Egô eimi anêr Ioudaios). Note use of Egô for emphasis. Paul recounts his Jewish advantages or privileges with manifest pride as in Acts 26:4; 2Co 11:22; Gal 1:14; Php 3:4-7. Born (gegennêmenos). Perfect passive participle of gennaô. See above in Acts 21:39 for the claim of Tarsus as his birth-place. He was a Hellenistic Jew, not an Aramaean Jew (cf. Acts 6:1). Brought up (anatethrammenos). Perfect passive participle again of anatrephô, to nurse up, to nourish up, common old verb, but in the N.T. only here, Acts 7:20, and MSS. in Luke 4:16. The implication is that Paul was sent to Jerusalem while still young, "from my youth" (Acts 26:4), how young we do not know, possibly thirteen or fourteen years old. He apparently had not seen Jesus in the flesh (2Co 5:16). At the feet of Gamaliel (pros tous podas Gamaliêl). The rabbis usually sat on a raised seat with the pupils in a circle around either on lower seats or on the ground. Paul was thus nourished in Pharisaic Judaism as interpreted by Gamaliel, one of the lights of Judaism. For remarks on Gamaliel see chapter Acts 5:34. He was one of the seven Rabbis to whom the Jews gave the highest title Rabban (our Rabbi). Rabbi (my teacher) was next, the lowest being Rab (teacher). "As Aquinas among the schoolmen was called Doctor Angelicus, and Bonaventura Doctor Seraphicus, so Gamaliel was called the Beauty of the Law" (Conybeare and Howson). Instructed (pepaideumenos). Perfect passive participle again (each participle beginning a clause), this time of paideuô, old verb to train a child (pais) as in Acts 7:22 which see. In this sense also in 1Ti 1:20; Tit 2:12. Then to chastise as in Luke 23:16, 22 (which see); 2Ti 2:25; Heb 12:6. According to the strict manner (kata akribesian). Old word, only here in N.T. Mathematical accuracy, minute exactness as seen in the adjective in Acts 26:5. See also Rom 10:2; Gal 1:4; Php 3:4-7. Of our fathers (patrôiou). Old adjective from pater, only here and Acts 24:14 in N.T. Means descending from father to son, especially property and other inherited privileges. Patrikos (patrician) refers more to personal attributes and affiliations. Being zealous for God (zêlôtês huparchôn tou theou). Not adjective, but substantive zealot (same word used by James of the thousands of Jewish Christians in Jerusalem, Acts 21:20 which see) with objective genitive tou theou (for God). See also verse Acts 22:14; Acts 28:17; 2Ti 1:3 where he makes a similar claim. So did Peter (Acts 3:13; Acts 5:30) and Stephen (Acts 7:32). Paul definitely claims, whatever freedom he demanded for Gentile Christians, to be personally "a zealot for God" "even as ye all are this day" (kathôs pantes humeis este sêmeron). In his conciliation he went to the limit and puts himself by the side of the mob in their zeal for the law, mistaken as they were about him. He was generous surely to interpret their fanatical frenzy as zeal for God. But Paul is sincere as he proceeds to show by appeal to his own conduct.

Verse 4

And I (hos). I who, literally. This Way (tautên tèn hodon). The very term used for Christianity by Luke concerning Paul's persecution (Acts 9:2), which see. Here it "avoids any irritating name for the Christian body" (Furneaux) by using this Jewish terminology. Unto the death (achri thanatou). Unto death, actual death of many as Acts 26:10 shows. Both men and women (andras te kai gunaikas).

Paul felt ashamed of this fact and it was undoubtedly in his mind when he pictured his former state as "a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious (1Ti 1:13), the first of sinners" (1Ti 1:15). But it showed the lengths to which Paul went in his zeal for Judaism.

Verse 5

Doth bear me witness (marturei moi). Present active indicative as if still living. Caiaphas was no longer high priest now, for Ananias is at this time (Acts 23:2), though he may be still alive. All the estate of the elders (pan to presbuterion). All the eldership or the Sanhedrin (Acts 4:5) of which Paul was probably then a member (Acts 26:10). Possibly some of those present were members of the Sanhedrin then (some 20 odd years ago). From whom (par' hôn). The high priest and the Sanhedrin. Letters unto the brethren (epistalas pros tous adelphous). Paul still can tactfully call the Jews his "brothers" as he did in Rom 9:3. There is no bitterness in his heart. Journeyed (eporeuomên). Imperfect middle indicative of poreuomai, and a vivid reality to Paul still as he was going on towards Damascus. To bring also (axôn kai). Future active participle of agô, to express purpose, one of the few N.T. examples of this classic idiom (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1118). Them which were there (tous ekeise ontas). Constructio praegnans. The usual word would be ekei (there), not ekeise (thither). Possibly the Christians who had fled to Damascus, and so were there (Robertson, Grammar, p. 548). In bonds (dedemenous). Perfect passive participle of deô, predicate position, "bound." For to be punished (hina timôrêthôsin). First aorist passive subjunctive of timôreô, old verb to avenge, to take vengeance on. In the N.T. only here, and Acts 26:11. Pure final clause with hina. He carried his persecution outside of Palestine just as later he carried the gospel over the Roman empire.

Verse 6

And it came to pass (egeneto de). Rather than the common kai egeneto and with the infinitive (periastrapsai), one of the three constructions with kai (de) egeneto by Luke (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1042), followed by kai, by finite verb, by subject infinitive as here. As I made my journey (moi poreuomenôi). To me (dative after egeneto, happened to me) journeying (participle agreeing with moi). See this same idiom in verse Acts 22:17. Luke uses egeneto de seventeen times in the gospel and twenty-one in the Acts. Unto Damascus (têi Damaskôi). Dative after eggizonti (drawing nigh to). About noon (peri mesêmbrian). Mid (mesos) day (hêmera), old word, in the N.T. only here and Acts 8:26 which see where it may mean "toward the south." An item not in ch. 9. Shone round about me (periastrapsai peri eme). First aorist active infinitive of periastraptô, to flash around, in LXX and late Greek, in the N.T. only here and Acts 9:3 which see. Note repetition of peri. A great light (phôs hikanon). Luke's favourite word hikanon (considerable). Accusative of general reference with the infinitive.

Verse 7

I fell (epesa). Second aorist active indicative with -a rather than epeson, the usual form of piptô. Unto the ground (eis to edaphos). Old word, here alone in N.T. So the verb edaphizô, is in Luke 19:44 alone in the N.T. A voice saying (phônês legousês). Genitive after êkousa, though in Acts 26:14 the accusative is used after êkousa, as in Acts 22:14 after akousai, either being allowable. See on Acts 9:7 for discussion of the difference in case. Saul's name repeated each time (Acts 9:4; Acts 22:7; Acts 26:14). Same question also in each report: "Why persecuted thou me?" (Ti me diôkeis?). These piercing words stuck in Paul's mind.

Verse 8

Of Nazareth (ho Nazôraios). The Nazarene, not in Acts 9:5; Acts 26:15 and here because Jesus is mentioned now for the first time in the address. The form Nazôraios as in Mat 2:23 (which see) is used also in Acts 24:5 for the followers of Jesus instead of Nazarênos as in Mark 1:24, etc. (which see).

Verse 9

But they heard not the voice (tên de phônên ouk êkousan). The accusative here may be used rather than the genitive as in verse Acts 22:7 to indicate that those with Paul did not understand what they heard (Acts 9:7) just as they beheld the light (Acts 22:9), but did not see Jesus (Acts 9:7). The difference in cases allows this distinction, though it is not always observed as just noticed about Acts 22:14; Acts 26:14. The verb akouô is used in the sense of understand (Mark 4:33; 1Co 14:2). It is one of the evidences of the genuineness of this report of Paul's speech that Luke did not try to smooth out apparent discrepancies in details between the words of Paul and his own record already in ch. 9. The Textus Receptus adds in this verse: "And they became afraid" (kai emphoboi egenonto). Clearly not genuine.

Verse 10

Into Damascus (eis Damaskon). In Acts 9:6 simply "into the city" (eis tēn polin). Of all things which (peri pantōn hōn). Hōn, relative plural attracted to genitive of antecedent from accusative ha, object of poiēsai (do). Are appointed for thee (tetaktai soi). Perfect passive indicative of tassô, to appoint, to order, with dative soi. Compare with hoti se dei of Acts 9:6. The words were spoken to Paul, of course, in the Aramaic, Saoul, Saoul.

Verse 11

I could not see (ouk eneblepon). Imperfect active of emblemô, I was not seeing, same fact stated in Acts 9:8. Here the reason as "for the glory of that light" (apo tēs doxēs tou phōtos ekeinou). Being led by the hand (cheiragōgoumenos). Present passive participle of cheiragōgeô, the same verb used in Acts 9:8 (cheiragōgountes) which see. Late verb, in the N.T. only in these two places. In LXX.

Verse 12

A devout man according to the law (eulabēs kata ton nomon). See on Acts 2:5; Acts 8:2; Luke 2:25 for the adjective eulabēs. Paul adds "according to the law" to show that he was introduced to Christianity by a devout Jew and no law-breaker (Lewin).

Verse 13

I looked up on him (anablepsa eis auton). First aorist active indicative and same word as anablepson (Receive thy sight). Hence here the verb means as the margin of the Revised Version has it: "I received my sight and looked upon him." For "look up" see John 9:11.

Verse 14

Hath appointed thee (procheirisato). First aorist middle indicative of procheirizô, old verb to put forth into one's hands, to take into one's hands beforehand, to plan, propose, determine. In the N.T. only in Acts 3:20; Acts 22:14; Acts 26:16. Three infinitives after this verb of God's purpose about Paul: to know (gnônai, second aorist active of ginôskô) his will, to see (idein, second aorist active of horaô) the Righteous One (cf. Acts 3:14), to hear (akousai, first aorist active of akouô) a voice from his mouth.

Verse 15

A witness for him (martus autôi). As in Acts 1:8. Of what (hôn). Attraction of the accusative relative ha to the genitive case of the unexpressed antecedent toutôn. Thou hast seen and heard (heôrakas, present perfect active indicative kai êkousas, first aorist active indicative). This subtle change of tense is not preserved in the English. Blass properly cites the perfect heôraka in 1Co 9:1 as proof of Paul's enduring qualification for the apostleship.

Verse 16

Be baptized (baptisai). First aorist middle (causative), not passive, Get thyself baptized (Robertson, Grammar, p. 808). Cf. 1Co 10:2. Submit yourself to baptism. So as to apolousai, Get washed off as in 1Co 6:11. It is possible, as in Acts 2:38, to take these words as teaching baptismal remission or salvation by means of baptism, but to do so is in my opinion a complete subversion of Paul's vivid and picturesque language. As in Rom 6:4-6 where baptism is the picture of death, burial and resurrection, so here baptism pictures the change that had already taken place when Paul surrendered to Jesus on the way (verse Acts 22:10). Baptism here pictures the washing away of sins by the blood of Christ.

Verse 17

When I had returned (moi hupostrepsanti), while I prayed (proseuchomenou mou), I fell (genesthai me). Note dative moi with egeneto as in verse Acts 22:6, genitive mou (genitive absolute with proseuchomenou), accusative of general reference me with genesthai, and with no effort at uniformity, precisely as in Acts 15:22, 23 which see. The participle is especially liable to such examples of anacolutha (Robertson, Grammar, p. 439).

Verse 18

Saw him saying (idein auton legonta). The first visit after his conversion when they tried to kill him in Jerusalem (Acts 9:29). Because (dioti, dia and hoti), for that.

Verse 19

Imprisoned and beat (êmên phulakizôn kai derôn). Periphrastic imperfect active of phulakizô (LXX and late Koin, here alone in the N.T.) and derô (old verb to skin, to beat as in Mat 21:35 which see). In every synagogue (kata tas sunagogas). Up and down (kata) in the synagogues.

Verse 20

Was shed (exechunneto). Imperfect passive of ekchunnô (see on Mat 23:35), was being shed. Witness (marturos). And "martyr" also as in Rev 2:13; Rev 17:6. Transition state for the word here. I also was standing by (kai autos êmên ephestôs). Periphrastic second past perfect in form, but imperfect (linear) in sense since hestôs=histamenos (intransitive). Consenting (suneudokôn). The very word used by Luke in Acts 8:1 about Paul. Koin, word for being pleased at the same time with (cf. Luke 11:48). Paul adds here the item of "guarding the clothes of those who were slaying (anairountôn as in Luke 23:32; Acts 12:2) him" (Stephen). Paul recalls the very words of protest used by him to Jesus. He did not like the idea of running away to save his own life right where he had helped slay Stephen. He is getting on dangerous ground.

Verse 21

I will send thee forth far hence unto the Gentiles (Egô eis ethnê makran exapostelô se). Future active of the double (ex, out, apo, off or away) compound of exapostellô, common word in the Koin, (cf. Luke 24:49). This is a repetition by Jesus of the call given in Damascus through Ananias (Acts 9:15). Paul had up till now avoided the word Gentiles, but at last it had to come, "the fatal word" (Farrar).

Verse 22

They gave him audience (êkouon). Imperfect active, they kept on listening, at least with respectful attention. Unto this word (achri toutou tou logou). But "this word" was like a spark in a powder magazine or a torch to an oil tank. The explosion of pent-up indignation broke out instantly worse than at first (Acts 21:30). Away with such a fellow from the earth (Aire apo tês gês ton toiouton). They renew the cry with the very words in Acts 21:36, but with "from the earth" for vehemence. For it is not fit (ou gar kathêken). Imperfect active of kathêkô, old verb to come down to, to become, to fit. In the N.T. only here and Rom 1:28. The imperfect is a neat Greek idiom for impatience about an obligation: It was not fitting, he ought to have been put to death long ago. The obligation is conceived as not lived up to like our "ought" (past of owe). See Robertson, Grammar, p. 886.

Verse 23

As they cried out (kraugazontôn autôn). Genitive absolute with present active participle of kraugazô, a rare word in the old Greek from kraugê (a cry). See on Mat 12:19. Two other genitive absolutes here, rhiptountôn (throwing off, present active participle, frequent active variation of rhiptô) and ballontôn (present active participle of ballô, flinging). These present participles give a lively picture of the uncontrolled excitement of the mob in their spasm of wild rage.

Verse 24

That he be examined by scourging (mastixin anetazesthai auton). The present passive infinitive of anetazô in indirect command after eipas (bidding). This verb does not occur in the old Greek (which used exetazô as in Mat 2:8), first in the LXX, in the N.T. only here and verse Acts 22:29, but Milligan and Moulton's Vocabulary quotes an Oxyrhynchus papyrus of A.D. 127 which has a prefect using the word directing government clerks to "examine" (anetazein) documents and glue them together into volumes (tomoi). The word was evidently in use for such purposes. It was a kind of "third degree" applied to Paul by the use of scourges (mastixin), instrumental plural of mastix, old word for whip, as in Heb 11:36. But this way of beginning an inquiry by torture (inquisition) was contrary to Roman law (Page): Non esse a tormentis incipiendum, Divus Augustus statuit. That he might know (hina epignôî). Final clause with hina and second aorist active subjunctive of epignôskô (full knowledge). Lysias was as much in the dark as ever, for Paul's speech had been in Aramaic and this second explosion was a mystery to him like the first. They so shouted (houtos epephônoun). Imperfect active progressive imperfect had been so shouting.

Verse 25

When they had tied him up (hos proeteinan auton). First aorist active indicative of proeteinô, old verb to stretch forward, only here in the N.T. Literally, "When they stretched him forward." With the thongs (tois himasin). If the instrumental case of himas, old word for strap or thong (for sandals as Mark 1:7, or for binding criminals as here), then Paul was bent forward and tied by the thongs to a post in front to expose his back the better to the scourges. But tois himasin may be dative case and then it would mean "for the lashes." In either case it is a dreadful scene of terrorizing by the chiliarch. Unto the centurion that stood by (pros ton hestôta hekatontarchon). He was simply carrying out the orders of the chiliarch (cf. Mat 27:54). Why had not Paul made protest before this? Is it lawful? (ei exestin?). This use of ei in indirect questions we have had before (Acts 1:6). A Roman and uncondemned (Romaion kai akatakriton). Just as in Acts 16:37 which see. Blass says of Paul's question: Interrogatio subironica est confidentiae plena.

Verse 26

What art thou about to do? (Ti melleis poiein?). On the point of doing, sharp warning.

Verse 27

Art thou a Roman? (Su Romaios ei?). Thou (emphatic position) a Roman? It was unbelievable.

Verse 28

With a great sum (pollou kephalaiou). The use of kephalaiou (from kephalê, head) for sums of money (principal as distinct from interest) is old and frequent in the papyri. Our word capital is from caput (head). The genitive is used here according to rule for price. "The sale of the Roman citizenship was resorted to by the emperors as a means of filling the exchequer, much as James I. made baronets" (Page). Dio Cassius (LX., 17) tells about Messalina the wife of Claudius selling Roman citizenship. Lysias was probably a Greek and so had to buy his citizenship. But I am a Roman born (Egô de kai gegennêmai). Perfect passive indicative of gennaô. The word "Roman" not in the Greek. Literally, "But I have been even born one," (i.e. born a Roman citizen). There is calm and simple dignity in this reply and pardonable pride. Being a citizen of Tarsus (Acts 21:39) did not make Paul a Roman citizen. Tarsus was an urbs libera, not a colonia like Philippi. Some one of his ancestors (father, grandfather) obtained it perhaps as a reward for distinguished service. Paul's family was of good social position. "He was educated by the greatest of the Rabbis; he was at an early age entrusted by the Jewish authorities with an important commission; his nephew could gain ready access to the Roman tribune; he was treated as a person of consequence by Felix, Festus, Agrippa, and Julius" (Furneaux).

Verse 29

Departed from him (apestêsan ap' autou). Second aorist active indicative (intransitive) of aphistêmi, stood off from him at once. Was afraid (ephobêthê). Ingressive aorist passive indicative of phobeomai, became afraid. He had reason to be. That he was a Roman (hoti Romaios estin). Indirect assertion with tense of estin retained. Because he had bound him (hoti auton ên dedekôs). Causal hoti here after declarative hoti just before. Periphrastic past perfect active of deô, to bind.

Verse 30

To know the certainty (gnônai to asphales). Same idiom in Acts 21:34 which see. Wherefore he was accused (to ti kategoreitai). Epexegetical after asphales. Note article (accusative case) with the indirect question here as in Luke 22:1, 23, 24 (which see), a neat idiom in the Greek. Commanded (ekeleusen). So the Sanhedrin had to meet, but in the Tower of Antonia, for he brought Paul down (katagagôn, second aorist active participle of katagô). Set him (estêsen). First aorist active (transitive) indicative of histêmi, not the intransitive second aorist estê. Lysias is determined to find out the truth about Paul, more puzzled than ever by the important discovery that he has a Roman citizen on his hands in this strange prisoner.

Looking steadfastly (atenisas). See on this word Acts 1:10; Acts 3:12; Acts 6:15; Acts 7:55; Acts 13:9. Paul may have had weak eyes, but probably the earnest gaze was to see if he recognized any faces that were in the body that tried Stephen and to which he apparently once belonged. I have lived before God (pepoliteumai tôi theôi). Perfect middle indicative of politeuô, old verb to manage affairs of city (polis) or state, to be a citizen, behave as a citizen. In the N.T. only here and Php 1:27. The idea of citizenship was Greek and Roman, not Jewish. "He had lived as God's citizen, as a member of God's commonwealth" (Rackham). God (theôi) is the dative of personal interest. As God looked at it and in his relation to God. In all good conscience unto this day (pasêi suneidêsei agathêi achri tautês tês hêmeras). This claim seems to lack tact, but for brevity's sake Paul sums up a whole speech in it. He may have said much more than Luke here reports along the line of his speech the day before, but Paul did not make this claim without consideration. It appears to contradict his confession as the chief of sinners (1Ti 1:13-16). But that depends on one's interpretation of "good conscience."

The word suneidêsis is literally "joint-knowledge" in Greek, Latin (conscientia) and English "conscience" from the Latin. It is a late word from sunoida, to know together, common in O.T., Apocrypha, Philo, Plutarch, New Testament, Stoics, ecclesiastical writers. In itself the word simply means consciousness of one's own thoughts (Heb 10:2), or of one's own self, then consciousness of the distinction between right and wrong (Rom 2:15) with approval or disapproval. But the conscience is not an infallible guide and acts according to the light that it has ( 1Co 8:7, 10; 1Pe 2:19). The conscience can be contaminated (Heb 10:22, evil ponêrâs). All this and more must be borne in mind in trying to understand Paul's description of his motives as a persecutor. Alleviation of his guilt comes thereby, but not removal of guilt as he himself felt (1Ti 1:13-16). He means to say to the Sanhedrin that he persecuted Christians as a conscientious (though mistaken) Jew (Pharisee) just as he followed his conscience in turning from Judaism to Christianity. It is a pointed disclaimer against the charge that he is a renegade Jew, an opposer of the law, the people, the temple. Paul addresses the Sanhedrin as an equal and has no "apologies" (in our sense) to make for his career as a whole. The golden thread of consistency runs through, as a good citizen in God's commonwealth. He had the consolation of a good conscience (1Pe 3:16). The word does not occur in the Gospels and chiefly in Paul's Epistles, but we see it at work in John 8:9 (the interpolation Acts 7:53-8:11).

Verse 2

Ananias (Hanantias). Not the one in Luke 3:2; John 18:13; Acts 4:7, but the son of Nebedaeus, nominated high priest by Herod, King of Chalcis, A.D. 48 and till A.D. 59. He was called to Rome A.D. 52 to answer "a charge of rapine and cruelty made against him by the Samaritans, but honourably acquitted" (Page). Though high priest, he was a man of bad character. Them that stood by him (tois parestôsin autôi). Dative case of second perfect participle of paristêmi, to place, and intransitive. See the same form in verse Acts 23:4 (parestôtes). To smite him on the mouth (tuptein autou to stoma). See on 12:45; Acts 18:17. Cf. the treatment of Jesus (John 18:22). Ananias was provoked by Paul's self-assertion while on trial before his judges. "The act was illegal and peculiarly offensive to a Jew at the hands of a Jew" (Knowling). More self-control might have served Paul better. Smiting the mouth or cheek is a peculiarly irritating offence and one not uncommon among the Jews and this fact gives point to the command of Jesus to turn the other cheek (Luke 6:29 where tuptô is also used).

Thou whited wall (toiche kekoniamene). Perfect passive participle of koniaô (from konia, dust or lime). The same word used in Mat 23:27 for "whited sepulchres" (taphoi kekoniamenoi) which see. It is a picturesque way of calling Ananias a hypocrite, undoubtedly true, but not a particularly tactful thing for a prisoner to say to his judge, not to say Jewish high priest. Besides, Paul had hurled back at him the word tuptein (smite) in his command, putting it first in the sentence (tuptein se mellei ho theos) in strong emphasis. Clearly Paul felt that he, not Ananias, was living as a good citizen in God's commonwealth. And sittest thou to judge me? (Kai su kathêi krinôn me?) Literally, "And thou (being what thou art) art sitting (kathêi, second person singular middle of kathêmai, late form for kathêsai, the uncontracted form) judging me." Cf. Luke 22:30. Kai su at the beginning of a question expresses indignation. Contrary to the law (paranomôn). Present active participle of paranomeô, old verb to act contrary to the law, here alone in the N.T., "acting contrary to the law."

Verse 4

Of God (tou theou). As God's representative in spite of his bad character (Deut 17:8). Here was a charge of irreverence, to say the least. The office called for respect.

Verse 5

I wist not (ouk êidein). Second past perfect of oida used as an imperfect. The Greek naturally means that Paul did not know that it was the high priest who gave the order to smite his mouth. If this view is taken, several things may be said by way of explanation. The high priest may not have had on his official dress as the meeting was called hurriedly by Lysias. Paul had been away so long that he may not have known Ananias on sight. And then Paul may have had poor eyesight or the high priest may not have been sitting in the official seat. Another way of explaining it is to say that Paul was so indignant, even angry, at the command that he spoke without considering who it was that gave the order. The Greek allows this idea also. At any rate Paul at once recognizes the justice of the point made against him. He had been guilty of irreverence against the office of high priest as the passage from Ex 22:18 (LXX) shows and confesses his fault, but the rebuke was deserved. Jesus did not threaten (1Pe 2:23) when smitten on the cheek (John 18:22), but he did protest against the act and did not turn the other cheek.

But when Paul perceived (gnous de ho Paulos). Perceiving (second aorist ingressive of ginôskô). Paul quickly saw that his cause was ruined before the Sanhedrin by his unwitting attack on the high priest. It was impossible to get a fair hearing. Hence, Vincent says, "Paul, with great tact, seeks to bring the two parties of the council into collision with each other." So Alford argues with the motto "divide and conquer." Farrar condemns Paul and takes Acts 24:21 as a confession of error here, but that is reading into Paul's word about the resurrection more than he says. Page considers Luke's report meagre and unsatisfactory. Rackham thinks that the trial was already started and that Paul repeated part of his speech of the day before when "the Sadducees received his words with ostentatious scepticism and ridicule: this provoked counter-expressions of sympathy and credulity among the Pharisees." But all this is inference. We do not have to adopt the Jesuitical principle that the end justifies the means in order to see shrewdness and hard sense in what Paul said and did. Paul knew, of course, that the Sanhedrin was nearly evenly divided between Pharisees and Sadducees, for he himself had been a Pharisee. I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees (Egô Pharisaïos eimi huios Pharisaïôn). This was strictly true as we know from his Epistles (Php 3:5). Touching the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question (peri elpidos kai anastaseôs nekrôn krinomai). This was true also and this is the point that Paul mentions in Acts 24:21. His failure to mention again the fact that he was a Pharisee throws no discredit on Luke's report here.

The chief point of difference between Pharisees and Sadducees was precisely this matter of the resurrection. And this was Paul's cardinal doctrine as a Christian minister. It was this fact that convinced him that Jesus was the Messiah and was "the very centre of his faith" (Page) and of his preaching. It was not a mere trick for Paul to proclaim this fact here and so divide the Sanhedrin. As a matter of fact, the Pharisees held aloof when the Sadducees persecuted Peter and the other apostles for preaching resurrection in the case of Jesus and even Gamaliel threw cold water on the effort to punish them for it (Acts 5:34-39). So then Paul was really recurring to the original cleavage on this point and was able to score a point against the Sadducees as Gamaliel, his great teacher, had done before him. Besides, "Paul and Pharisaism seem to us such opposite ideas that we often forget that to Paul Christianity was the natural development of Judaism" (Page). Paul shows this in Gal 3:1ff.; Rom 9:1-11:36.

Verse 7

When he had so said (touto autou lalountos). Genitive absolute of present participle (Westcott and Hort) rather than aorist (eipontos). While he was saying this. A dissension (stasis). This old word for standing or station (Heb 9:8) from histêmi, to place, we have seen already to mean insurrection (Acts 19:40 which see). Here it is strife as in Acts 15:2. Was divided (eschisthê). See on Acts 14:4.

Verse 8

There is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit (mê einai anastasin mête aggelon mête pneuma). Infinitive with negative mê in indirect assertion. These points constitute the chief doctrinal differences between the Pharisees and the Sadducees. Both (amphotera). Here used though three items of belief are mentioned as in Acts 19:16 where the seven sons of Sceva are thus described. This idiom is common enough in papyri and Byzantine Greek (Robertson, Grammar, p. 745).

Verse 9

Stroke (diemachonto). Imperfect middle of diamachomai, old Attic verb, to fight it out (between, back and forth, fiercely). Here only in the N.T. It was a lively scrap and Luke pictures it as going on. The Pharisees definitely take Paul's side. And what if a spirit hath spoken to him or an angel? (ei de pneuma elalêsen autôî ê aggelos?). This is aposiopesis, not uncommon in the N.T., as in Luke 13:9; John 6:62 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1203). See one also in Ex 32:32.

Verse 10

When there arose a great dissension (pollês tês ginomenês staseôs). Present middle participle (genitive absolute). Literally, "dissension becoming much." Lest Paul should be torn in pieces by them (mê diaspasthêi ho Paulos). First aorist passive subjunctive of diaspaô, to draw in two, to tear in pieces, old verb, in the N.T. only here and Mark 5:4 of tearing chains in two. The subjunctive with mê is the common construction after a verb of fearing (Robertson, Grammar, p. 995). The soldiers (to strateuma). The army, the band of soldiers and so in verse Acts 23:27. To go down (kataban). Second aorist active participle of katabainô, having gone down. Take him by force (harpasai). To seize. The soldiers were to seize and save Paul from the midst of (ek mesou) the rabbis or preachers (in their rage to get at each other). Paul was more of a puzzle to Lysias now than ever.

Verse 11

The night following (têi epiousêi nukti). Locative case, on the next (following) night. The Lord (ho kurios). Jesus. Paul never needed Jesus more than now. On a previous occasion the whole church prayed for Peter's release (Acts 12:5), but Paul clearly had no such grip on the church as that, though he had been kindly welcomed (Acts 21:18). In every crisis Jesus appears to him (cf. Acts 18:9). It looked dark for Paul till Jesus spoke. Once before in Jerusalem Jesus spoke words of cheer (Acts 22:18). Then he was told to leave Jerusalem. Now he is to have "cheer" or "courage" (tharsei). Jesus used this very word to others (Mat 9:2, 22; Mark 10:49). It is a brave word. Thou hast testified (diemarturô). First aorist middle indicative second person singular of diamarturomai, strong word (see on Acts 22:18). Must thou (se dei). That is the needed word and on this Paul leans. His hopes (Acts 19:21) of going to Rome will not be in vain. He can bide Christ's time now. And Jesus has approved his witness in Jerusalem.

Verse 12

Banded together (poiêsantes sustrophên). See on Acts 19:40 (riot), but here conspiracy, secret combination, binding together like twisted cords. Bound themselves under a curse (anethematisan heautous). First aorist active indicative of anathematizô, a late word, said by Cremer and Thayer to be wholly Biblical or ecclesiastical. But Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 95) quotes several examples of the verb in an Attic cursing tablet from Megara of the first or second century A.D. This proof shows that the word, as well as anathema (substantive) from which the verb is derived, was employed by pagans as well as by Jews. Deissmann suggests that Greek Jews like the seven sons of Sceva may have been the first to coin it. It occurs in the LXX as well as Mark 14:71 (which see and Luke 21:5); Acts 23:12, 14, 21. They placed themselves under an anathema or curse, devoted themselves to God (cf. Lev 27:28; 1Co 16:22). Drink (pein=piein). Second aorist active infinitive of pinô. For this shortened form see Robertson, Grammar, p. 343. Till they had killed (heôs hou apokteinôsin). First aorist active subjunctive of apokteinô, common verb. No reason to translate "had killed," simply "till they should kill," the aorist merely punctiliar action, the subjunctive retained instead of the optative for vividness as usual in the Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 974-6). Same construction in verse Acts 23:14. King Saul took an "anathema" that imperilled Jonathan (1Sa 14:24). Perhaps the forty felt that the rabbis could find some way to absolve the curse if they failed. See this verse repeated in verse Acts 23:21.

Verse 13

More than forty (pleious tesserakonta). Without "than" (ê) as in verse Acts 23:21; Acts 24:11 and often in the ancient Greek. Conspiracy (sunômosian). Old word from sunomnumi, to swear together. Only here in the N.T.

Verse 14

Came to the chief priests and the elders (proselthontes tois archiereusin kai tois presbuterois). The Sanhedrin, just as Judas did (Luke 22:4). With a great curse (anathemati). This use of the same word as the verb repeated in the instrumental case is in imitation of the Hebrew absolute infinitive and common in the LXX, the very idiom and words of Deut 13:15; Deut 20:17, an example of translation Greek, though found in other languages (Robertson, Grammar, p. 531). See on Luke 21:5 for the distinction between anathema and anathêma. Jesus had foretold: "Whoso killeth you will think that he doeth God service" (John 16:2).

Verse 15

Ye (humeis). Emphatic. Signify (emphanisate). First aorist active imperative of emphanizô. Make plain from emphanês, chiefly in Acts. Repeated in verse Acts 23:22. The authority is with the chiliarch not with the Sanhedrin, but he had appealed to the Sanhedrin for advice. As though ye would judge of his case more exactly (hôs mellontas diaginôskein akribesteron ta peri autou). Hôs with the participle gives the alleged reason as here. So also in verse Acts 23:20. Diagnoskô, old verb to distinguish accurately, only here in N.T. and Acts 24:22. Or ever come near (pro tou eggisai auton). "Before the coming near as to him." Pro and the genitive of the articular infinitive of eggizô with accusative of general reference. We are ready to slay him (hetoimoi esmen tou anelein auton). Genitive of purpose of the articular infinitive after the adjective hetoimoi (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1061). Anelein, second aorist active of anaireô.

Verse 16

Their lying in wait (tên enedran). Old word from en (in) and hedra (seat), ambush. In N.T. only here and Acts 25:3. Accusative object of akousas. He came (paragenomenos). Second aorist middle participle of paraginomai. It may mean, "having come upon them" and so discount their plot, a graphic touch. Vincent thinks that some Pharisee, since Paul was a Pharisee and so a member of the "guild," told his nephew of the plot. Perhaps, and perhaps not. Told Paul (apêggeilen tôi Paulôi). This nephew is not known otherwise. He may be a student here from Tarsus as Paul once was. Anyhow he knows what to do when he catches on to the conspirators. He had enough address to get into the barracks where Paul was. He ran the risk of death if discovered.

Verse 17

Called unto him (proskalesamenos). First aorist participle indirect middle, calling to himself. Paul laid his plans as energetically as if Jesus had not promised that he would see Rome (Acts 23:11). Bring (apage). "Take away."

Verse 18

Paul the prisoner (ho desmios Paulos). Bound (desmios) to a soldier, but not with two chains (Acts 21:33), and with some freedom to see his friends as later (Acts 28:16), in military custody (custodia militaris). This was better than custodia publica (public custody), the common prison, but more confining. Who hath something to say to thee (echonta ti lalêsai soi). Same idiom as in verse Acts 23:17, 19, but lalêsai here instead of apageilai.

Verse 19

Took him by the hand (epilabomenos tês cheiros autou). Kindly touch in Lysias, ut fiduciam adolescentis confirmaret (Bengel). Note genitive with the second aorist middle (indirect, to himself) of epilambanô as in Luke 8:54 with kratêsas which see. How old the young man (neanias) was we do not know, but it is the very word used of Paul in Acts 7:58 when he helped in the killing of Stephen, a young man in the twenties probably. See also Acts 20:9 of Eutychus. He is termed neaniskos in verse Acts 23:22. Asked him privately (kat' idian epunthaneto). Imperfect middle, began to ask (inchoative).

Verse 20

The Jews (hoi Ioudaioi). As if the whole nation was in the conspiracy and so in verse Acts 23:12. The conspirators may have belonged to the Zealots, but clearly they represented the state of Jewish feeling toward Paul in Jerusalem. Have agreed (sunethento). Second aorist middle indicative of suntithêmi, old verb to join together, to agree. Already this form in Luke 22:5 which see. See also John 9:22; Acts 24:9. To bring down (hopôs katagagêis). Very words of the conspirators in verse Acts 23:15 as if the young man overheard. Second aorist active subjunctive of katagô with hopôs in final clause, still used, but nothing like so common as hina though again in verse Acts 23:23 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 985). As though thou wouldst inquire (hôs mellôn punthanesthai). Just as in verse Acts 23:15 except that here mellôn refers to Lysias instead of to the conspirators as in verse Acts 23:15. The singular is used by the youth out of deference to the authority of Lysias and so modifies a bit the scheming of the conspirators, not "absurd" as Page holds.

Verse 21

Do not therefore yield unto them (Su oun mê peisthêis autois). First aorist passive subjunctive of peithô, common verb, here to be persuaded by, to listen to, to obey, to yield to. With negative and rightly. Do not yield to them (dative) at all. On the aorist subjunctive with mê in prohibitions against committing an act see Robertson, Grammar, pp. 851-4. For there lie in wait (enedreuousin gar). Present active indicative of enedreuô, old verb from enedra (verse Acts 23:16), in the N.T. only here and Luke 11:54 which see. Till they have slain him (heôs hou anelôsin auton). Same idiom as in verse Acts 23:12 save that here we have anelôsin (second aorist active subjunctive) instead of apokteinôsin (another word for kill), "till they slay him." Looking for the promise from thee (prosdechomenoi tèn apo sou epaggelian). This item is all that is needed to put the scheme through, the young man shrewdly adds.

Verse 22

Tell no man (mêdeni eklalêsai). Indirect command (oratio obliqua) after parageilas (charging) with first aorist active infinitive of eklaleô (in ancient Greek, but here only in N.T.), but construction changed to direct in rest of the sentence (oratio recta) as in Acts 1:4, "that thou hast signified these things to me" (hoti tauta enephanisas pros eme). Same verb here as in verse Acts 23:15. This change is common in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1047).

Verse 23

Two (tinas duo). "Some two" as in Luke 7:19, indicating (Page) that they were not specially chosen. Soldiers (stratiôtas), horsemen (hippeis), spearmen (dexiolabous). The three varieties of troops in a Roman army like the cohort of Lysias (Page). The stratiôtai were the heavy-armed legionaries, the hippeis belonged to every legion, the dexiolaboi were light-armed supplementary troops who carried a lance in the right hand (dexios, right, lambanô, to take). Vulgate, lancearios. At the third hour of the night (apo tritês hôras tês nuktos). About nine in the evening.

Verse 24

Provide beasts (ktenê parastêsai). Change from direct to indirect discourse just the opposite of that in verse Acts 23:22. Beasts (ktenê). For riding as here or for baggage. See on Luke 10:34. Asses or horses, but not war-horses. Since Paul was chained to a soldier, another animal would be required for baggage. It was also seventy miles and a change of horses might be needed. The extreme precaution of Lysias is explained in some Latin MSS. as due to fear of a night attack with the result that he might be accused to Felix of bribery. Luke also probably accompanied Paul. To bring safe (hina diasôsôsin). Final clause with hina and the first aorist active subjunctive of diasôzô, old verb, to save through (dia) to a finish. Eight times in the N.T. (Mat 14:36; Luke 7:3; Acts 23:24; Acts 27:43, 44; Acts 28:1, 4; 1Pe 3:20). Unto Felix the governor (pros Phêlika ton hêgemonon). Felix was a brother of Pallas, the notorious favourite of Claudius. Both had been slaves and were now freedmen. Felix was made procurator of Judea by Claudius A.D. 52. He held the position till Festus succeeded him after complaints by the Jews to Nero. He married Drusilla the daughter of Herod Agrippa I with the hope of winning the favour of the Jews. He was one of the most depraved men of his time. Tacitus says of him that "with all cruelty and lust he exercised the power of a king with the spirit of a slave." The term "governor" (hêgemôn) means "leader" from hêgeomai, to lead, and was applied to leaders of all sorts (emperors, kings, procurators). In the N.T. it is used of Pilate (Mat 27:2), of Felix, (Acts 23:24, 26, 33; Acts 24:1), of Festus (Acts 26:30).

Verse 25

And he wrote (grapsas). First aorist active participle of graphô, agreeing with the subject (Lysias) of eipen (said) back in verse Acts 23:23 (beginning). After this form (echousan ton tupon touton). Textus Receptus has periechousan. The use of tupon (type or form) like exemplum in Latin (Page who quotes Cicero Ad Att. IX. 6. 3) may give merely the purport or substantial contents of the letter. But there is no reason for thinking that it is not a genuine copy since the letter may have been read in open court before Felix, and Luke was probably with Paul. The Roman law required that a subordinate officer like Lysias in reporting a case to his superior should send a written statement of the case and it was termed elogium. A copy of the letter may have been given Paul after his appeal to Caesar. It was probably written in Latin. The letter is a "dexterous mixture of truth and falsehood" (Furneaux) with the stamp of genuineness. It puts things in a favourable light for Lysias and makes no mention of his order to scourge Paul.

Verse 26

Most excellent (kratistôi). See on Luke 1:3 to Theophilus though not in Acts 1:1. It is usual in addressing men of rank as here, like our "Your Excellency" in Acts 24:3 and Paul uses it to Festus in Acts 26:25. Greeting (chairein). Absolute infinitive with independent or absolute nominative (Klaudios Lusias) as is used in letters (Acts 15:23; Jas 1:1) and in countless papyri (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1092).

Verse 27

Was seized (sullêmphthenta). First aorist passive participle of sullambanô. Rescued him having learned that he was a Roman (exeilamen mathôn hoti Romaios estin). Wendt, Zoekler, and Furneaux try to defend this record of two facts by Lysias in the wrong order from being an actual lie as Bengel rightly says. Lysias did rescue Paul and he did learn that he was a Roman, but in this order. He did not first learn that he was a Roman and then rescue him as his letter states. The use of the aorist participle (mathôn from manthanô) after the principal verb exeilamen (second aorist middle of exaireô, to take out to oneself, to rescue) can be either simultaneous action or antecedent. There is in Greek no such idiom as the aorist participle of subsequent action (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1112-14). Lysias simply reversed the order of the facts and omitted the order for scourging Paul to put himself in proper light with Felix his superior officer and actually poses as the protector of a fellow Roman citizen.

Verse 28

To know (epignônai). To know fully, epi, second aorist active infinitive. They accused him (enekaloun autôî). Imperfect active indicative, were accusing him (dative), repeating their charges.

Verse 29

Concerning questions of their law (peri zêtêmata tou nomou autôn). The very distinction drawn by Gallio in Corinth (Acts 18:14). On the word see on Acts 15:2. But to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds (mêden de axion thanatou ê desmôn echonta enklêma). Literally, "having no accusation (or crime) worthy of death or of bonds." This phrase here only in the N.T. Egklêma is old word for accusation or crime from egkaleô used in verse Acts 23:28 and in the N.T. only here and Acts 25:16. Lysias thus expresses the opinion that Paul ought to be set free and the lenient treatment that Paul received in Caesarea and Rome (first imprisonment) is probably due to this report of Lysias. Every Roman magistrate before whom Paul appears declares him innocent (Gallio, Lysias, Felix, Festus).

Verse 30

When it was shown to me that there would be a plot (mênutheisês moi epiboulês esesthai). Two constructions combined; genitive absolute (mênutheisês epiboulês, first aorist passive participle of mênuô) and future infinitive (esesthai as if epiboulên accusative of general reference used) in indirect assertion after mênuô (Robertson, Grammar, p. 877). Charging his accusers also (paraggeilas kai tois katêgorois). First aorist active participle of paraggeillô with which compare mathôn above (verse Acts 23:27), not subsequent action. Dative case in katêgorois. Before thee (epi sou). Common idiom for "in the presence of" when before a judge (like Latin apud) as in Acts 24:20, 21; Acts 25:26; Acts 26:2. What happened to the forty conspirators we have no way of knowing. Neither they nor the Jews from Asia are heard of more during the long five years of Paul's imprisonment in Caesarea and Rome.

Verse 31

As it was commanded them (kata to diatetagmenon autois). "According to that which was commanded them," perfect passive articular participle of diatassô. By night (dia nuktos). Through the night, travelling by night forty miles from Jerusalem to Antipatris which was founded by Herod the Great and was on the road from Jerusalem to Caesarea, a hard night's ride.

Verse 33

And they (hoitines). Which very ones, the cavalry, the horsemen of verse Acts 23:31. Delivered (anadontes). Second aorist active participle of anadidômi, old verb to give up, to hand over, here only in the N.T. Presented Paul also (parestêsan kai ton Paulon). First aorist active (transitive, not second aorist intransitive) indicative of paristêmi, common verb to present or place beside. What would Paul's friends in Caesarea (Philip and his daughters) think of the prophecy of Agabus now so quickly come true.

Verse 34

When he had read it (anagnous). Second aorist active participle of anaginôskô, to know again, to read. Of what province he was (ek poias eparcheias estin). Tense of estin (is) retained in indirect question. Poias is strictly "of what kind of" province, whether senatorial or imperial. Cilicia, like Judea, was under the control of the propraetor of Syria (imperial province). Paul's arrest was in Jerusalem and so under the jurisdiction of Felix unless it was a matter of insurrection when he could appeal to the propraetor of Syria.

Verse 35

I will hear thy cause (diakousomai). "I will hear thee fully" (dia). When--are come (paragenōntai). Second aorist middle subjunctive of paraginomai with temporal conjunction hotan, indefinite temporal clause of future time (Robertson, Grammar, p. 972), "whenever thine accusers come." In Herod's palace (en tōi praitōriōi). The Latin word praetorium. The word meant the camp of the general, then the palace of the governor as here and Mat 27:27 which see, and then the camp of praetorian soldiers or rather the praetorian guard as in Php 1:13.

Verse 1

And with an Orator, one Tertullus (kai rhētoros Tertullou tinos). A deputation of elders along with the high priest Ananias, not the whole Sanhedrin, but no hint of the forty conspirators or of the Asian Jews. The Sanhedrin had become divided so that now it is probably Ananias (mortally offended) and the Sadducees who take the lead in the prosecution of Paul. It is not clear whether after five days is from Paul's departure from Jerusalem or his arrival in Caesarea. If he spent nine days in Jerusalem, then the five days would be counted from then (verse Acts 24:11). The employment of a Roman lawyer (Latin orator) was necessary since the Jews were not familiar with Roman legal procedure and it was the custom in the provinces (Cicero pro Cael. 30). The speech was probably in Latin which Paul may have understood also. Rhêtôr is a common old Greek word meaning a forensic orator or advocate but here only in the N.T. The Latin rhetor was a teacher of rhetoric, a very different thing. Tertullus is a diminutive of Tertius (Rom 16:22). Informed (enephanisan). Same verb as in Acts 23:15, 22, somewhat like our modern "indictment," certainly accusations "against Paul" (kata tou Paulou). They were down on Paul and the hired barrister was prosecuting attorney. For the legal form see Oxyrhynchus Papyri, Vol. II., p. 162, line 19.

Verse 2

When he (Paul) was called (klêthentos autou). Genitive absolute (as so often in Acts) with first aorist passive participle of kaleô. Seeing that by thee we enjoy much peace (pollês eirênês tugchanontes dia sou). Literally, obtaining much peace by thee. A regular piece of flattery, captatio benevolentiae, to ingratiate himself into the good graces of the governor. Felix had suppressed a riot, but Tacitus (Ann. XII. 54) declares that Felix secretly encouraged banditti and shared the plunder for which the Jews finally made complaint to Nero who recalled him. But it sounded well to praise Felix for keeping peace in his province, especially as Tertullus was going to accuse Paul of being a disturber of the peace. And that by thy providence (kai dia tês pronoias). Forethought, old Greek word from pronoos (pronoëô in 1Ti 5:8; Rom 12:17; 2Co 8:21), in N.T. only here and Rom 13:14. "Providence" is Latin Providentia (foreseeing, provideo). Roman coins often have Providentia Caesaris. Post-Augustan Latin uses it of God (Deus). Evils are corrected for this nation (diorthômatôn ginomenôn tôi ethnei toutôi). Genitive absolute again, ginomenôn, present middle participle describing the process of reform going on for this nation (dative case of personal interest). Diorthôma (from diorthoô, to set right) occurs from Aristotle on of setting right broken limbs (Hippocrates) or reforms in law and life (Polybius, Plutarch). "Reform continually taking place for this nation." Felix the Reform Governor of Judea! It is like a campaign speech, but it doubtless pleased Felix.

Verse 3

In all ways and in all places (pantêi te kai pantachou). Pantêi, old adverb of manner only here in N.T. Pantachou also old adverb of place, several times in N.T. But these adverbs most likely go with the preceding clause about "reforms" rather than as here translated with "we accept" (apodechometha). But "with all gratitude" (meta pasês eucharistias) does naturally go with apodechometha.

Verse 4

That I be not further tedious unto thee (hina mê epi pleion se enkoptô). Koin, verb (Hippocrates, Polybius) to cut in on (or into), to cut off, to impede, to hinder. Our modern telephone and radio illustrate it well. In the N.T. (Acts 24:4; 1Th 2:18; Gal 5:7; Rom 15:22; 1Pe 3:7). "That I may not cut in on or interrupt thee further (epi pleion) in thy reforms." Flattery still. Of thy clemency (têi sêi epieikeiâi). Instrumental case of old word from epieikês and this from epi and eikos (reasonable, likely, fair). "Sweet Reasonableness" (Matthew Arnold), gentleness, fairness. An epieikês man is "one who makes reasonable concessions" (Aristotle, Eth. V. 10), while dikaios is "one who insists on his full rights" (Plato, Leg. 757 D) as translated by Page. A few words (suntomôs). Old adverb from suntemnô, to cut together (short), abbreviate. Like dia bracheôn in Heb 13:22. In N.T. only here and Mark 16:1ff. (shorter conclusion).

Verse 5

For we have found (heurontes gar). Second aorist active participle of heuriskô, but without a principal verb in the sentence. Probably we have here only a "summary of the charges against Paul" (Page). A pestilent fellow (loimon). An old word for pest, plague, pestilence, Paul the pest. In N.T. only here and Luke 21:11 (loimoi kai limoi, pestilences and famines) which see. Latin pestis. Think of the greatest preacher of the ages being branded a pest by a contemporary hired lawyer. A mover of insurrections (kinounta staseis). This was an offence against Roman law if it could be proven. "Plotted against at Damascus, plotted against at Jerusalem, expelled from Pisidian Antioch, stoned at Lystra, scourged and imprisoned at Philippi, accused of treason at Thessalonica, haled before the proconsul at Corinth, cause of a serious riot at Ephesus, and now finally of a riot at Jerusalem" (Furneaux). Specious proof could have been produced, but was not. Tertullus went on to other charges with which a Roman court had no concern (instance Gallio in Corinth). Throughout the world (kata tên oikoumenên). The Roman inhabited earth (gên) as in Acts 17:6. A ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes (prôtostatên tês tôn Nazôraiôn hairesêôs). Prôtostatês is an old word in common use from prôtos and histêmi, a front-rank man, a chief, a champion. Here only in the N.T. This charge is certainly true. About "sect" (hairesis) see on Acts 5:17. Nazôraioi here only in the plural in the N.T., elsewhere of Jesus (Mat 2:23; Mat 26:71; Luke 18:37; John 18:5, 7; John 19:19; Acts 2:22; Acts 3:6 Acts 4:10; Acts 6:14; Acts 22:8; Acts 26:9). The disciple is not above his Master. There was a sneer in the term as applied to Jesus and here to his followers.

Verse 6

Assayed to profane (epeirasen bebêlôsai). A flat untruth, but the charge of the Asian Jews (Acts 21:28-30). Verbum optimum ad calumnian (Bengel). We seized (ekratêsamen). As if the Sanhedrin had arrested Paul, Tertullus identifying himself with his clients. But it was the mob (Acts 21:28-31) that attacked Paul and Lysias who rescued him (Acts 21:32).

Verse 7

This whole verse with some words at the end of verse Acts 24:6 and the beginning of verse Acts 24:8 in the Textus Receptus ("And would have judged according to our law. But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands, commanding his accusers to come unto thee") is absent from Aleph A B H L P 61 (many other cursives) Sahidic Bohairic. It is beyond doubt a later addition to the incomplete report of the speech of Tertullus. As the Revised Version stands, verse Acts 24:8 connects with verse Acts 24:6. The motive of the added words is clearly to prejudice Felix against Lysias and they contradict the record in Acts 21:1ff. Furneaux holds them to be genuine and omitted because contradictory to Acts 21:1ff. More likely they are a clumsy attempt to complete the speech of Tertullus.

Verse 8

From whom (par' hou). Referring to Paul, but in the Textus Receptus referring to Lysias. By examining him thyself (autos anakrinas). Not by torture, since Paul was a Roman citizen, but by hearing what Paul has to say in defence of himself. Anakrinô is to examine thoroughly up and down as in Luke 23:14.

Verse 9

Joined in the charge (sunepethento). Second aorist middle indicative of sunepitithêmi, old verb, double compound, to place upon (epi) together with (sun), to make a joint attack, here only in the N.T. Affirming (phaskontes). Alleging, with the accusative in indirect assertion as in Acts 25:19; Rom 1:22 (nominative with infinitive, Robertson, Grammar, p. 1038). Were so (houtôs echein), "held thus," common idiom.

Verse 10

When the governor had beckoned to him (neusantos autôi tou hêgemonos). Genitive absolute again with first aorist active participle of neuô, to give a nod, old word, in N.T. only here and John 13:24. "The governor nodding to him." Forasmuch as I know (epistamenos). Knowing, from epistamai. That thou hast been of many years a judge (ek pollôn etôn onta se kritên). The participle in indirect assertion after epistamenos (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1041). Paul goes as far as he can in the way of a compliment. For seven years Felix has been governor, onta being a sort of progressive present participle with ek pollôn etôn (Robertson, Grammar, p. 892). Cheerfully (euthumôs). Old adverb from euthumos (eu and thumos, good spirit), here only in N.T. Make my defence (apologoumai). Old and regular word for this idea as in Luke 21:14 which see.

Verse 11

Seeing that thou canst take knowledge (dunamenou sou epignônai). Genitive absolute again. The same word and form (epignônai) used by Tertullus, if in Greek, in verse Acts 24:8 to Felix. Paul takes it up and repeats it. Not more than twelve days (ou pleious hêmerai dôdeka). Here ê (than) is absent without change of case to the ablative as usually happens. But this idiom is found in the Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, p. 666). Since (aph' hês). Supply hêmeras, "from which day." To worship (proskunêsôn). One of the few examples of the future participle of purpose so common in the old Attic.

Verse 12

Disputing (dialegomenon). Simply conversing, discussing, arguing, and then disputing, common verb in old Greek and in N.T. (especially in Acts). Stirring up a crowd (epistasin poiounta ochlou). Epistasis is a late word from ephistêmi, to make an onset or rush. Only twice in the N.T., 2Co 11:28 (the pressure or care of the churches) and here (making a rush of a crowd). The papyri give examples also for "onset." So Paul denies the two charges that were serious and the only one that concerned Roman law (insurrection).

Verse 13

Prove (parastêsai). First aorist active infinitive of paristêmi, to place beside. They have made "charges," mere assertions. They have not backed up these charges with proof, "nor can they," says Paul. Now (nuni). As if they had changed their charges from the cries of the mob in Jerusalem which is true. Paul has no hired lawyer to plead for him, but he has made a masterly plea for his freedom.

Verse 14

I confess (homologô). The only charge left was that of being a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes. This Paul frankly confesses is true. He uses the word in its full sense. He is "guilty" of that. After the Way (kata tèn hodon). This word Paul had already applied to Christianity (Acts 22:4). He prefers it to "sect" (hairesin which means a choosing, then a division). Paul claims Christianity to be the real (whole, catholic) Judaism, not a "sect" of it. But he will show that Christianity is not a deviation from Judaism, but the fulfilment of it (Page) as he has already shown in Gal 3:1ff.; Rom 9:1ff. So serve I the God of our fathers (houtôs latreuô tôi patrôiôi theôi). Paul has not stretched the truth at all. He has confirmed the claim made before the Sanhedrin that he is a spiritual Pharisee in the truest sense (Acts 23:6). He reasserts his faith in all the law and the prophets, holding to the Messianic hope. A curious "heretic" surely! Which these themselves also look for (hên kai autoi houtoi prosdechontai). Probably with a gesture towards his accusers. He does not treat them all as Sadducees. See Tit 2:13 for similar use of the verb (prosdechomenoi tèn makarian elpida, looking for the happy hope).

Verse 15

That there shall be a resurrection (anastasin mellein esesthai). Indirect assertion with infinitive and accusative of general reference (anastasin) after the word elpida (hope). The future infinitive esesthai after mellein is also according to rule, mellô being followed by either present, aorist, or future infinitive (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 870, 877, 878). Both of the just and the unjust (dikaiôn te kai adikôn). Apparently at the same time as in John 5:29 (cf. Acts 17:31). Gardner thinks that Luke here misrepresents Paul who held to no resurrection save for those "in Christ," a mistaken interpretation of Paul in my opinion. The Talmud teaches the resurrection of Israelites only, but Paul was more than a Pharisee.

Verse 16

Herein (en toutôi). His whole confession of belief in verses Acts 24:14, 15. Do I also exercise myself (kai autos askô). "Do I also myself take exercise," take pains, labour, strive. Old word in Homer to work as raw materials, to adorn by art, then to drill. Our word ascetic comes from this root, one who seeks to gain piety by rules and severe hardship. Paul claims to be equal to his accusers in efforts to please God. Void of offence (aproskopon). This word belongs to the papyri and N.T. (only in Paul), not in the ancient writers. The papyri examples (Moulton Milligan, Vocabulary) use the word to mean "free from hurt or harm." It is a privative and proskoptô (to cut or stumble against). Page likes "void of offence" since that can be either active "not stumbling" as in Php 1:10 or passive "not stumbled against" as in 1Co 10:32 (the first toward God and the second toward men), the only other N.T. examples. Hence the word here appears in both senses (the first towards God, the second towards men). Paul adds "alway" (dia pantos), a bold claim for a consistent aim in life. "Certainly his conscience acquitted him of having caused any offence to his countrymen" (Rackham). Furneaux thinks that it must have been wormwood and gall to Ananias to hear Paul repeat here the same words because of which he had ordered Paul to be smitten on the mouth (Acts 23:1).

Verse 17

After many years (di' etôn pleionôn). "At an interval (dia) of more (pleionôn) years" (than a few, one must add), not "after many years." If, as is likely Paul went up to Jerusalem in Acts 18:22, that was some five years ago and would justify "pleionôn" (several years ago or some years ago). To bring alms (eleêmosunas poiêson). Another (see proskunêsôn in verse Acts 24:11) example of the future participle of purpose in the N.T. These "alms" (on eleêmosunas see on Mat 6:1, 4; see also Acts 10:2, common in Tobit and is in the papyri) were for the poor saints in Jerusalem (1Co 16:1-4; 2Co 8; 2Co 9; Rom 15:26) who were none the less Jews. "And offerings" (kai prosphoras). The very word used in Acts 21:26 of the offerings or sacrifices made by Paul for the four brethren and himself. It does not follow that it was Paul's original purpose to make these "offerings" before he came to Jerusalem (cf. Acts 18:18). He came up to worship (verse Acts 24:11) and to be present at Pentecost (Acts 20:16).

Verse 18

Amidst which (en hail). That is, "in which offerings" (in presenting which offerings, Acts 21:27). They found me (my accusers here present, heuron me), purified in the temple (hêgnismenon en tôi hierôi). Perfect passive participle of hagnizô (same verb in Acts 21:24, 26) state of completion of the Jewish sacrifices which had gone on for seven days (Acts 21:27), the very opposite of the charges made. With no crowd (ou meta ochlou). "Not with a crowd" till the Asiatic Jews gathered one (Acts 21:27). Nor yet with tumult (oude meta thorubou). They made the tumult (Acts 27:30), not Paul. Till they made the stir, all was quiet.

Verse 19

But certain Jews from Asia (tines de apo tês Alias Ioudaioi). No verb appears in the Greek for these words. Perhaps he meant to say that "certain Jews from Asia charged me with doing these things." Instead of saying that, Paul stops to explain that they are not here, a thoroughly Pauline anacoluthon (2Co 7:5) as in Acts 26:9. "The passage as it stands is instinct with life, and seems to exhibit the abruptness so characteristic of the Pauline Epistles" (Page). Who ought to have been here before thee (hous edei epi sou pareinai). This use of epi with genitive of the person is common. The imperfect indicative with verbs of necessity and obligation to express failure to live up to it is common in Greek (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 919-21). "The accusers who were present had not witnessed the alleged offence: those who could have given evidence at first-hand were not present" (Furneaux). There was no case in a Roman court. These Asiatic Jews are never heard of after the riot, though they almost succeeded in killing Paul then. If they had aught against me (ei ti echoien pros eme). A condition of the fourth class or undetermined with less likelihood of being determined (ei with the optative, Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). This is a "mixed condition" (op.cit., p. 1022) with a conclusion of the second class.

Verse 20

These men themselves (autoi houtoi). Since the Asiatic Jews are not present and these men are. Wrong doing (adikêma). Or misdeed. Old word from adikeô, to do wrong. In the N.T. only here and Acts 18:14; Rev 18:5. Paul uses "adikêma" from the standpoint of his accusers. "To a less sensitive conscience his action before the Sanhedrin would have seemed venial enough" (Furneaux). When I stood (stantos mou). Genitive absolute, second aorist active participle of histêmi (intransitive), "when I took my stand." Before the council (epe tou sunedriou). Same use of epe with genitive as in verse Acts 24:19.

Verse 21

Except it be (e). Literally, "than," but after interrogative ti = ti allo "what else than." For this one voice (peri mias tautês phônês). The normal Greek idiom with the attributive use of houtos calls for the article before mias, though some inscriptions show it as here (Robertson, Grammar, p. 702). That (hês). Genitive of the relative attracted to the case of the antecedent ph'n's. I cried (ekekraxa). Reduplicated aorist as is usual with this verb in the LXX (Jdg 3:15). Robertson, Grammar, p. 348. Touching (peri). Concerning (around, about). I am called in question (krinomai). As in Acts 23:6. Before you (eph' humôn). Same idiom as in verses Acts 24:19, 20.

Verse 22

Having more exact knowledge (akribesteron eidôs). "Knowing" (second perfect active participle of oida) "more accurately" (comparative of adverb akribôs). More accurately than what? Than the Sanhedrin supposed he had "concerning the Way" (ta peri tês hodou, the things concerning the Way, common in Acts for Christianity). How Felix had gained this knowledge of Christianity is not stated. Philip the Evangelist lived here in Caesarea and there was a church also. Drusilla was a Jewess and may have told him something. Besides, it is wholly possible that Felix knew of the decision of Gallio in Corinth that Christianity was a religio licita as a form of Judaism. As a Roman official he knew perfectly well that the Sanhedrin with the help of Tertullus had failed utterly to make out a case against Paul. He could have released Paul and probably would have done so but for fear of offending the Jews whose ruler he was and the hope that Paul (note "alms" in verse Acts 24:17) might offer him bribes for his liberty. Deferred them (anebaletô autous). Second aorist middle indicative of anaballô, old verb (only here in N.T.) to throw or toss up, to put back or off, in middle to put off from one, to delay, to adjourn. Felix adjourned the case without a decision under a plausible pretext, that he required the presence of Lysias in person, which was not the case. Lysias had already said that Paul was innocent and was never summoned to Caesarea, so far as we know. Since Paul was a Roman citizen, Lysias could have thrown some light on the riot, if he had any. Shall come down (katabêi). Second aorist active subjunctive of katabainô. I will determine your matter (diagnôsomai ta kath' humâs). Future middle of diaginôskô, old and common verb to know accurately or thoroughly (dia). In the N.T. only here (legal sense) and Acts 23:15. "The things according to you" (plural, the matters between Paul and the Sanhedrin).

Verse 23

And should have indulgence (echein te anesin). From aniêmi, to let loose, release, relax. Old word, in the N.T. only here and 2Th 1:7; 2Co 2:13; 2Co 7:5; 2Co 8:13. It is the opposite of strict confinement, though under guard, "kept in charge" (têreisthai). Forbid (kôluein). To hinder "no one of his friends" (mêdena tôn idiôn). No one of Paul's "own" (cf. Acts 4:23; John 1:11) or intimates. Of these we know the names of Luke, Aristarchus, Trophimus, Philip the Evangelist.

Verse 24

With Drusilla his wife (sun Drousillêi têi idiâi gunaiki). Felix had induced her to leave her former husband Aziz, King of Emesa. She was one of three daughters of Herod Agrippa I (Drusilla, Mariamne, Bernice). Her father murdered James, her great-uncle Herod Antipas slew John the Baptist, her great-grandfather (Herod the Great) killed the babes of Bethlehem. Perhaps the mention of Drusilla as "his own wife" is to show that it was not a formal trial on this occasion. Page thinks that she was responsible for the interview because of her curiosity to hear Paul. Sent for (metepempsato). First aorist middle of metapempô as usual (Acts 10:5).

Verse 25

Was terrified (emphobos genomenos). Ingressive aorist middle of ginomai, "becoming terrified." Emphobos (en and phobos) old word, in the N.T. only Luke 24:5; Acts 10:5; Acts 24:25; Rev 11:13. Paul turned the tables completely around and expounded "the faith in Christ Jesus" as it applied to Felix and Drusilla and discoursed (dialegomenou autou, genitive absolute) concerning "righteousness" (dikaïosunês) which they did not possess, "self-control" or temperance (egkrateias) which they did not exhibit, and "the judgment to come" (tou krimatos tou mellontos) which was certain to overtake them. Felix was brought under conviction, but apparently not Drusilla. Like another Herodias her resentment was to be feared (Knowling). Go thy way for this time (to nun echon poreuou). The ancient Greek has this use of to nun echon (Tobit 7:11) in the accusative of time, "as for the present or holding the now." When I have a convenient season (kairon metalabôn). Second aorist active participle of the old verb metalambanô, to find a share in, to obtain. It was his "excuse" for dodging the personal turn that Paul had given.

Verse 26

He hoped withal (hama kai elpizôn). "At the same time also hoping." Paul had mentioned the "alms" (Acts 24:17) and that excited the avarice of Felix for "money" (chrêmata). Roman law demanded exile and confiscation for a magistrate who accepted bribes, but it was lax in the provinces. Felix had doubtless received them before. Josephus (Ant. XX. 8, 9) represents Felix as greedy for money. The oftener (puknoteron). Comparative adverb of puknos, old word, in N.T. only here and Luke 5:33 which see and 1Ti 5:23. Kin to pugmê (Mark 7:3) which see from pukô, thick, dense, compact. Paul kept on not offering a bribe, but Felix continued to have hopes (present tense elpizôn), kept on sending for him (present tense metapempomenos), and kept on communing (imperfect active hômilei from homileô, old word as in Acts 20:11; Luke 24:14, which see, only N.T. examples of this word). But he was doomed to disappointment. He was never terrified again.

Verse 27

But when two years were fulfilled (dietias de plêrôtheisês). Genitive absolute first aorist passive of plêroô, common verb to fill full. Dietia, late word in LXX and Philo, common in the papyri, in N.T. only here and Acts 28:30. Compound of dia, two (duo, dis) and etos, year. So Paul lingered on in prison in Caesarea, waiting for the second hearing under Felix which never came. Caesarea now became the compulsory headquarters of Paul for two years. With all his travels Paul spent several years each at Tarsus, Antioch, Corinth, Ephesus, though not as a prisoner unless that was true part of the time at Ephesus for which there is some evidence though not of a convincing kind. We do not know that Luke remained in Caesarea all this time. In all probability he came and went with frequent visits with Philip the Evangelist. It was probably during this period that Luke secured the material for his Gospel and wrote part or all of it before going to Rome. He had ample opportunity to examine the eyewitnesses who heard Jesus and the first attempts at writing including the Gospel of Mark (Luke 1:1-4). Was succeeded by (elaben diadochon). Literally, "received as successor." Diadochos is an old word from diadechomai, to receive in succession (dia, duo, two) and occurs here alone in the N.T. Deissmann (Bible Studies, p.

115) gives papyri examples where hoi diadochoi means "higher officials at the court of the Ptolemies," probably "deputies," a usage growing out of the "successors" of Alexander the Great (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary), though here the original notion of "successor" occurs (cf. Josephus, Ant. XX. 8, 9). Luke does not tell why Felix "received" a successor. The explanation is that during these two years the Jews and the Gentiles had an open fight in the market-place in Caesarea. Felix put the soldiers on the mob and many Jews were killed. The Jews made formal complaint to the Emperor with the result that Felix was recalled and Porcius Festus sent in his stead. Porcius Festus (Porkion Phêston). We know very little about this man. He is usually considered a worthier man than Felix, but Paul fared no better at his hands and he exhibits the same insincerity and eagerness to please the Jews. Josephus (Ant. XX. 8, 9) says that "Porcius Festus was sent as a successor to Felix." The precise year when this change occurred is not clear. Albinus succeeded Festus by A.D. 62, so that it is probable that Festus came A.D. 58 (or 59). Death cut short his career in a couple of years though he did more than Felix to rid the country of robbers and sicarii. Some scholars argue for an earlier date for the recall of Felix. Nero became Emperor Oct. 13, A.D. 54. Poppaea, his Jewish mistress and finally wife, may have had something to do with the recall of Felix at the request of the Jews. Desiring to gain favour with the Jews (thelôn te charita katathesthai tois Ioudaiois). Reason for his conduct. Note second aorist (ingressive) middle infinitive katathesthai from katatithêmi, old verb to place down, to make a deposit, to deposit a favour with, to do something to win favour. Only here and Acts 25:9 in N.T., though in some MSS. in Mark 15:46. It is a banking figure. Left Paul in bonds (katelipe ton Paulon dedemenon). Effective aorist active indicative of kataleipô, to leave behind. Paul "in bonds" (dedemenon, perfect passive participle of deô, to bind) was the "deposit" (katathesthai) for their favour. Codex Bezae adds that Felix left Paul in custody "because of Drusilla" (dia Droussillan). She disliked Paul as much as Herodias did John the Baptist. So Pilate surrendered to the Jews about the death of Jesus when they threatened to report him to Caesar. Some critics would date the third group of Paul's Epistles (Philippians, Philemon, Colossians, Ephesians) to the imprisonment here in Caesarea, some even to one in Ephesus. But the arguments for either of these two views are more specious than convincing. Furneaux would even put 2Ti 4:9-22 here in spite of the flat contradiction with Acts 21:29 about Trophimus being in Jerusalem instead of Miletus (2Ti 4:20), a "mistake" which he attributes to Luke! That sort of criticism can prove anything.

Verse 1

Having come into the province (epibas têi eparcheiâi). Second aorist active participle of epibainô, to set foot upon. Literally, "Having set foot upon his province." Eparcheia is a late word for province, in N.T. only here and Acts 23:34. Judea was not strictly a province, but a department (Page) of the province of Syria which was under a propraetor (legatus Caesaris) while Judea was under a procurator (epitropos). After three days (meta treis hêmeras). So in Acts 28:17 in Rome. That is on the third day, with a day of rest in between. Precisely the language used of the resurrection of Jesus "after three days" = "on the third day." So by common usage then and now.

Verse 2

The principal men (hoi prôtoi). The first men, the leading men of the city, besides the chief priests. In verse Acts 25:15 we have "the chief priests and the elders." These chief men among the Jews would desire to pay their respects to the new Procurator on his first visit to Jerusalem. There was another high priest now, Ishmael in place of Ananias. Informed him against Paul (enephanisan autôî kata tou Paulou). "This renewal of the charge after two years, on the very first opportunity, is a measure, not only of their unsleeping hatred, but of the importance which they attached to Paul's influence" (Furneaux). Besought (parekaloun). Imperfect active, kept on beseeching as a special favour to the Jews.

Verse 3

Asking favour against him (aitoumenoi charin kat' autou). A favour to themselves (middle voice), not to Paul, but "against" (kat', down, against) him. That he would send for (hopôs metapempsetai). First aorist middle subjunctive of metapempô (see Acts 24:24, 26) with final particle hopôs like hina. Aorist tense for single case. Laying wait (enedran poiountes). See on Acts 23:16 for the word enedra. Old idiom (Thucydides) for laying a plot or ambush as here. Only these two uses of enedra in N.T. Two years before the Sanhedrin had agreed to the plot of the forty conspirators. Now they propose one on their own initiative. On the way (kata tēn hodon). Down along, up and down along the way. Plenty of opportunity would occur between Caesarea and Jerusalem for ambush and surprise attacks.

Verse 4

Howbeit (men oun). No antithesis expressed, though Page considers de in verse Acts 25:6 to be one. They probably argued that it was easier for one man (Paul) to come to Jerusalem than for many to go down there. But Festus was clearly suspicious (verse Acts 25:6) and was wholly within his rights to insist that they make their charges in Caesarea where he held court. Was kept in charge (têreisthai). Present passive infinitive of têreô in indirect assertion. Hoti with finite verb is more common after apokrinomai, but the infinitive with the accusative of general reference is proper as here (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1036). Shortly (en tachei). In quickness, in speed. Old and common usage, seen already in Luke 18:8; Acts 12:7; Acts 22:18. Festus is clearly within his rights again since his stay in Caesarea had been so brief. He did go down in "eight or ten days" (verse Acts 25:6). Luke did not consider the matter important enough to be precise.

Them therefore which are of power among you (hoi oun en humin dunatoi). "The mighty ones among you," "the men of power" (dunatoi) and authority, "the first men," the Sanhedrin, in other words. Note change here by Luke from indirect discourse in verse Acts 25:4, to direct in verse Acts 25:5 (phêsîn, says he). Go down with me (sunkatabantes). Double compound (sun, kata) second aorist active participle of sunkatabainô. It was a fair proposal. If there is anything amiss in the man (ei ti estin en tōi andri atopon).

Condition of the first class, assuming that there is (to be courteous to them), but not committing himself on the merits of the case. Atopon is an old word, specially common in Plato, meaning "out of place." In N.T. only here and Luke 23:41 which see; Acts 28:6; 2Th 3:2. Note present tense active voice of katêgoreitôsan (imperative) of katêgoreô, repeat their accusations.

Verse 6

On the morrow (têi epaurion). Locative case of the article with hêmerai understood (epaurion, adverb, tomorrow). Festus lost no time for the chief men had come down with him. Sat on the judgment seat (kathisas epi tou bêmatos). A legal formality to give weight to the decision. Ingressive aorist active participle. For this use of bêma for judgment seat see on Mat 27:19; John 19:13; Acts 12:21; Acts 18:12; Acts 25:10, 17. Same phrase repeated in Acts 25:17. To be brought (achthênai). First aorist passive infinitive of agô after ekeleusen (commanded). Same words repeated in Acts 25:17 by Festus.

Verse 7

When he was come (paragenomenou autou). Genitive absolute of common verb paraginomai (cf. Acts 24:24). Which had come down (hoi katabebêkotes). Perfect active participle of katabainô. They had come down on purpose at the invitation of Festus (verse Acts 25:5), and were now ready. Stood round about him (periestêsan auton). Second aorist (ingressive) active (intransitive) of periistêmi, old verb, "Took their stand around him," "periculum intentantes" (Bengel). Cf. Luke 23:10 about Christ. They have no lawyer this time, but they mass their forces so as to impress Festus. Bringing against him (katapherontes). Bearing down on. See on Acts 20:9; Acts 26:10, only N.T. examples of this ancient verb. Many and grievous charges (polla kai barea aitiômata). This word aitiôma for old form aitiama is found in one papyrus (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary) in sense of "blame." But the charges were no "heavier" than those made by Tertullus (Acts 24:5-8). Paul's reply proves this and they were also probably on court record (Furneaux). See this adjective barus (heavy) used with lukoi (wolves) in Acts 20:29. Which they could not prove (ha ouk ischuon apodeixai).

Imperfect active of ischuō, to have strength or power as in Acts 19:16, 20. Repetition and reiteration and vehemence took the place of proof (apodeixai, first aorist active infinitive of apodeiknumi, to show forth, old verb, in N.T. only here, Acts 2:22 which see and 1Co 4:9).

Verse 8

While Paul said in his defence (tou Paulou apologoumenou). Genitive absolute again, present middle participle of apologeomai, old verb to make defence as in Acts 19:33; Acts 24:10; Acts 26:1, 2. The recitative hoti of the Greek before a direct quotation is not reproduced in English. Have I sinned at all (ti hêmarton). Constatative aorist active indicative of hamartanō, to miss, to sin. The ti is cognate accusative (or adverbial accusative). Either makes sense. Paul sums up the charges under the three items of law of the Jews, the temple, the Roman state (Caesar). This last was the one that would interest Festus and, if proved, would render Paul guilty of treason (majestas). Nero was Emperor A.D. 54-68, the last of the emperors with any hereditary claim to the name "Caesar." Soon it became merely a title like Kaiser and Czar (modern derivatives). In Acts only "Caesar" and "Augustus" are employed for the Emperor, not "King" (Basileus) as from the time of Domitian. Paul's denial is complete and no proof had been presented. Luke was apparently present at the trial.

Verse 9

Desiring to gain favour with the Jews (thelôn tois Ioudaiois charin katathesthai). Precisely the expression used of Felix by Luke in Acts 24:27 which see. Festus, like Felix, falls a victim to fear of the Jews. Before me (ep' emou). Same use of epi with the genitive as in Acts 23:30; Acts 24:19, 21. Festus, seeing that it was unjust to condemn Paul and yet disadvantageous to absolve him (Blass), now makes the very proposal to Paul that the rulers had made to him in Jerusalem (verse Acts 25:3). He added the words "ep' emou" (before me) as if to insure Paul of justice. If Festus was unwilling to give Paul justice in Caesarea where his regular court held forth, what assurance was there that Festus would give it to him at Jerusalem in the atmosphere of intense hostility to Paul? Only two years ago the mob, the Sanhedrin, the forty conspirators had tried to take his life in Jerusalem. Festus had no more courage to do right than Felix, however plausible his language might sound. Festus also, while wanting Paul to think that he would in Jerusalem "be judged of these things before me," in reality probably intended to turn Paul over to the Sanhedrin in order to please the Jews, probably with Festus present also to see that Paul received justice (me presente). Festus possibly was surprised to find that the charges were chiefly against Jewish law, though one was against Caesar. It was not a mere change of venue that Paul sensed, but the utter unwillingness of Festus to do his duty by him and his willingness to connive at Jewish vengeance on Paul. Paul had faced the mob and the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem, two years of trickery at the hands of Felix in Caesarea, and now he is confronted by the bland chicanery of Festus. It is too much, the last straw.

Verse 10

I am standing before Caesar's judgment-seat (Hestôs epi tou bêmatos Kaisaros eimi). Periphrastic present perfect indicative (hestôs eimi), second perfect participle hestôs of histêmi (intransitive). Paul means to say that he is a Roman citizen before a Roman tribunal. Festus was the representative of Caesar and had no right to hand him over to a Jewish tribunal. Festus recognized this by saying to Paul "wilt thou" (theleis). Where I ought to be judged (hou me dei krinesthai). Rather, "Where I must be judged," for dei expresses necessity (it is necessary). Paul exposes the conduct of Festus with merciless precision. As thou also very well knowest (hôs kai su kallion epiginôskeis). "As thou also dost understand (hast additional knowledge, epiginôskeis) better" (than thou art willing to admit). That this is Paul's meaning by the use of the comparative kallion (positive kalôs) is made plain by the confession of Festus to Agrippa in verse Acts 25:18. Paul says that Festus knows that he has done no wrong to the Jews at all (ouden êdikêka) and yet he is trying to turn him over to the wrath of the Jews in Jerusalem.

Verse 11

If I am a wrong-doer (ei men oun adikô). Condition of the first class with ei and the present active indicative of adikeô (a privative and dikē): "If I am in the habit of doing injustice," assuming it to be true for the sake of argument. And have committed anything worthy of death (kai axion thanatou pepracha). Same condition with the difference in tense (pepracha, perfect active indicative) of a single case instead of a general habit. Assuming either or both Paul draws his conclusion. I refuse not to die (ou paraitoumai to apothanein). Old verb to ask alongside, to beg from, to deprecate, to refuse, to decline. See on Luke 14:18. Josephus (Life, 29) has thanein ou paraitoumai. Here the articular second aorist active infinitive is in the accusative case the object of paraitoumai: "I do not beg off dying from myself." But if none of these things is (ei de ouden estin). De here is contrasted with men just before. No word for "true" in the Greek. Estin ("is") in the Greek here means "exists." Same condition (first class, assumed as true). Whereof these accuse me (hōn houtoi katēgorousin mou). Genitive of relative hōn by attraction from ha (accusative with katēgorousin) to case of the unexpressed antecedent toutōn ("of these things"). Mou is genitive of person after katēgorousin. No man can give me up to them (oudeis me dunatai autois charisasthai). "Can" legally. Paul is a Roman citizen and not even Festus can make a free gift (charisasthai) of Paul to the Sanhedrin. I appeal unto Caesar (Kaisara epikaloumai). Technical phrase like Latin Caesarem appello. Originally the Roman law allowed an appeal from the magistrate to the people (provocatio ad populum), but the emperor represented the people and so the appeal to Caesar was the right of every Roman citizen. Paul had crossed the Rubicon on this point and so took his case out of the hands of dilatory provincial justice (really injustice). Roman citizens could make this appeal in capital offences. There would be expense connected with it, but better that with some hope than delay and certain death in Jerusalem. Festus was no better than Felix in his vacillation and desire to curry favour with the Jews at Paul's expense. No doubt Paul's long desire to see Rome (Acts 19:21; Rom 15:22-28) and the promise of Jesus that he would see Rome (Acts 23:11) played some part in Paul's decision. But he made it reluctantly for he says in Rome (Acts 28:19): "I was constrained to appeal." But acquittal at the hands of Festus with the hope of going to Rome as a free man had vanished.

Verse 12

When he had conferred with the council (sunlalêsas meta tou sumbouliou). The word sumboulion in the N.T. usually means "counsel" as in Mat 12:14, but here alone as an assembly of counsellors or council. But the papyri (Milligan and Moulton's Vocabulary) furnish a number of instances of this sense of the word as "council." Here it apparently means the chief officers and personal retinue of the procurator, his assessors (assessores consilarii). These local advisers were a necessity. Some discretion was allowed the governor about granting the appeal. If the prisoner were a well-known robber or pirate, it could be refused. Thou hast appealed unto Caesar (Kaisara epikeklêsai). The same technical word, but the perfect tense of the indicative. Unto Caesar thou shalt go (epi Kaisara poreusêi). Perhaps the volitive future (Robertson, Grammar, p. 874). Bengel thinks that Festus sought to frighten Paul with these words. Knowling suggests that "they may have been uttered, if not with a sneer, yet with the implication 'thou little knowest what an appeal to Caesar means.'" But embarrassment will come to Festus. He has refused to acquit this prisoner. Hence he must formulate charges against him to go before Caesar.

Verse 13

When certain days were passed (Hêmerôn diagenomenon). Genitive absolute of diaginomai, to come between, "days intervening." Agrippa the King (Agrippas ho basileus). Agrippa II son of Agrippa I of Acts 12:20-23. On the death of Herod King of Chalcis A.D. 48, Claudius A.D. 50 gave this Herod Agrippa II the throne of Chalcis so that Luke is correct in calling him king, though he is not king of Judea. But he was also given by Claudius the government of the temple and the right of appointing the high priest. Later he was given also the tetrarchies of Philip and Lysanias. He was the last Jewish king in Palestine, though not king of Judea. He angered the Jews by building his palace so as to overlook the temple and by frequent changes in the high priesthood. He made his capital at Caesarea Philippi which he called Neronias in honour of Nero. Titus visited it after the fall of Jerusalem. Bernice (Bernikê). He was her brother and yet she lived with him in shameful intimacy in spite of her marriage to her uncle Herod King of Chalcis and to Polemon

King of Cilicia whom she left. Schuerer calls her both a Jewish bigot and a wanton. She afterwards became the mistress of Titus. Arrived at Caesarea (katêntêsan eis Kaisarian). Came down (first aorist active of katantaô) to Caesarea from Jerusalem. And saluted Festus (aspasamenoî ton Phêston). The Textus Receptus has aspasomenoî the future participle, but the correct text is the aorist middle participle aspasamenoî which cannot possibly mean subsequent action as given in the Canterbury Revision "and saluted." It can only mean contemporaneous (simultaneous) action "saluting" or antecedent action like the margin "having saluted." But antecedent action is not possible here, so that simultaneous action is the only alternative. It is to be noted that the salutation synchronized with the arrival in Caesarea (note kata, down, the effective aorist tense), not with the departure from Jerusalem, nor with the whole journey. Rightly understood the aorist participle here gives no trouble at all (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 861-3).

Verse 14

Tarried (diatribon). Imperfect active of diatribô, common verb for spending time (Acts 12:19, etc.). Many days (pleious hêmeras). More days (than a few). Accusative case for extent of time. Laid Paul's case (anetheto ta kata ton Paulon). Second aorist middle indicative of anatithêmi, old verb to set before, to place up, as if for consultation in conference. Only twice in N.T. here and Gal 2:2. The motive of Festus is not given, though it was natural enough in view of the quandary of Festus about Paul (the things about Paul) and Agrippa's interest in and responsibility for Jewish worship in the temple in Jerusalem. It is quite possible that Festus had a bit of ennui over the visit of these Jewish dignitaries as "more days" went by. Hence the tone of Festus about Paul in this proposal for the entertainment of Agrippa and Bernice is certainly one of superficial and supremely supercilious indifference. Left a prisoner (kataleimmenos desmios). Perfect passive participle of kataleipô, to leave behind. Paul is one of Felix's left overs (left behind), a sort of "junk" left on his hands. This cowardly Roman procurator thus pictures the greatest of living men and the greatest preacher of all time to this profligate pair (brother and sister) of sinners.

Undoubtedly today in certain circles Christ and his preachers are held up to like contempt.

Verse 15

Informed (enephanisan). Same word as in Acts 23:15, 22; Acts 25:2 which see. Asking for sentence against him (aitoumenoi kat' autou katadikên). Only N.T. example of this old word (penalty, fine, condemnation) from kata and dikê (justice against).

Verse 16

It is not the custom of the Romans (hoti ouk estin ethos Rômaïois). If a direct quotation, hoti is recitative as in Authorized Version. Canterbury Revision takes it as indirect discourse after apekrithên (I answered), itself in a relative clause (pros hous) with the present tense (estin, is) preserved as is usual. There is a touch of disdain (Furneaux) in the tone of Festus. He may refer to a demand of the Jews before they asked that Paul be brought to Jerusalem (Acts 25:3). At any rate there is a tone of scorn towards the Jews. Before that the accused have (prin ê ho katêgoroumenos echoi). This use of the optative in this temporal clause with prin ê instead of the subjunctive an echêi is in conformity with literary Greek and occurs only in Luke's writings in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 970). This sequence of modes is a mark of the literary style occasionally seen in Luke. It is interesting here to note the succession of dependent clauses in verses Acts 25:14-16. The accusers face to face (kata prosôpon tous katêgorous). Same word katêgoros as in Acts 23:30, 35; Acts 25:18. This all sounds fair enough. And have had opportunity to make his defence concerning the matter laid against him (topon te apologias laboi peri tou egklêmatos). Literally, "And should receive (laboi optative for same reason as echoi above, second aorist active of lambanô) opportunity for defence (objective genitive) concerning the charge" (egklêmatos in N.T. only here and Acts 23:19 which see).

Verse 17

but without autôn (they), merely understood. Delay (anabolên). Old word from anaballô, only here in N.T.

Verse 18

Brought (epheron). Imperfect active of pherô, referring to their repeated charges. Of such evil things as I supposed (hôn egô hupenooun ponêrôn). Incorporation of the antecedent ponêrôn into the relative clause and change of the case of the relative from the accusative ha object of hupenooun to the genitive like ponêrôn (Robertson, Grammar, p. 719). Note the imperfect active hupenooun of huponoëô to emphasize Festus's state of mind about Paul before the trial. This old verb only three times in the N.T. (here, Acts 13:25 which see; Acts 27:27).

Verse 19

But had (de eichon). Descriptive imperfect active of echô and de of contrast (but). Concerning their own religion (peri tês idias deisidaimonias). See on Acts 17:22 for discussion of this word. Festus would hardly mean "superstition," whatever he really thought, because Agrippa was a Jew. And of one Jesus (kai peri tinos Iêsou). This is the climax of supercilious scorn toward both Paul and "one Jesus." Who was dead (tethnêkotos). Perfect active participle of thnêskô agreeing with Iêsou (genitive). As being dead. Whom Paul affirmed to be alive (hon ephasken ho Paulos zêin). Imperfect active of phaskô, old form of phêmi to say, in the N.T. only here and Acts 24:9; Rom 1:22. Infinitive zêin in indirect discourse with hon (whom) the accusative of general reference. With all his top-loftical airs Festus has here correctly stated the central point of Paul's preaching about Jesus as no longer dead, but living.

Verse 20

Being perplexed (aporoumenos). Present middle participle of the common verb aporeô (a privative and poros way), to be in doubt which way to turn, already in Mark 6:20 which see and Luke 24:4. The Textus Receptus has eis after here, but critical text has only the accusative which this verb allows (Mark 6:20) as in Thucydides and Plato. How to inquire concerning these things (tên peri toutôn zêtêsin). Literally, "as to the inquiry concerning these things." This is not the reason given by Luke in verse Acts 25:9 (wanting to curry favour with the Jews), but doubtless this motive also actuated Festus as both could be true. Whether he would go to Jerusalem (ei bouloïto poreuesthai eis Ierosoluma). Optative in indirect question after elegon (asked or said) imperfect active, though the present indicative could have been retained with change of person: "Dost thou wish, etc.," (ei boulêi, etc.). See Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1031, 1044. This is the question put to Paul in verse Acts 25:9 though theleis is there used.

Verse 21

When Paul had appealed (tou Paulou epikalesamenou). Genitive absolute with first aorist middle participle of epikaleomai, the technical word for appeal (verses Acts 25:11, 12). The first aorist passive infinitive têrêthênai (to be kept) is the object of the participle. For the decision of the emperor (eis tèn tou Sebastou diagnôsin). Diagnôsin (cf. diagnôsomai Acts 24:22, I will determine) is the regular word for a legal examination (cognitio), thorough sifting (dia), here only in N.T. Instead of "the Emperor" it should be "the Augustus," as Sebastos is simply the Greek translation of Augustus, the adjective (Revered, Reverent) assumed by Octavius B.C. 27 as the agnomen that summed up all his various offices instead of Rex so offensive to the Romans having led to the death of Julius Caesar. The successors of Octavius assumed Augustus as a title. The Greek term Sebastos has the notion of worship (cf. sebasma in Acts Acts 17:25). In the N.T. only here, verse Acts 25:25; Acts 27:1 (of the legion). It was more imposing than "Caesar" which was originally a family name (always official in the N.T.) and it fell in with the tendency toward emperor-worship which later played such a large part in Roman life and which Christians opposed so bitterly. China is having a revival of this idea in the insistence on bowing three times to the picture of Sun-Yat-Sen. Till I should send him to Caesar (heôs an anapempsô auton pros Kaisara). Here anapempsô can be either future indicative or first aorist subjunctive (identical in first person singular), aorist subjunctive the usual construction with heôs for future time (Robertson, Grammar, p. 876). Literally, "send up" (ana) to a superior (the emperor). Common in this sense in the papyri and Koin, writers. Here "Caesar" is used as the title of Nero instead of "Augustus" as Kurios (Lord) occurs in verse Acts 25:26.

Verse 22

I also could wish (eboulomên kai autos). The imperfect for courtesy, rather than the blunt boulomai, I wish, I want. Literally, "I myself also was wishing" (while you were talking), a compliment to the interesting story told by Festus. The use of an with the imperfect would really mean that he does not wish (a conclusion of the second class condition, determined as unfulfilled). An with the optative would show only a languid desire. The imperfect is keen enough and yet polite enough to leave the decision with Festus if inconvenient for any reason (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 885-7). Agrippa may have heard much about Christianity.

Verse 23

When Agrippa was come and Bernice (elthontos tou Agrippa kai tês Bernikês). Genitive absolute, the participle agreeing in number and gender (masculine singular, elthontos) with Agrippa, Bernikês being added as an afterthought. With great pomp (meta pollês phantasias). Phantasia is a Koin, word (Polybius, Diodorus, etc.) from the old verb phantazô (Heb 12:21) and it from phainô, common verb to show, to make an appearance. This is the only N.T. example of phantasia, though the kindred common word phantasma (appearance) occurs twice in the sense of apparition or spectre (Mat 14:26; Mark 6:49). Herodotus (VII. 10) used the verb phantazô for a showy parade. Festus decided to gratify the wish of Agrippa by making the "hearing" of Paul the prisoner (verse Acts 25:22) an occasion for paying a compliment to Agrippa (Rackham) by a public gathering of the notables in Caesarea. Festus just assumed that Paul would fall in with this plan for a grand entertainment though he did not have to do it. Into the place of hearing (eis to akroatêrion). From akroaomai (to be a hearer) and, like the Latin auditorium, in Roman law means the place set aside for hearing, and deciding cases. Here only in the N.T. Late word, several times in Plutarch and other Koin, writers. The hearing was "semi-official" (Page) as is seen in verse Acts 25:26. With the chief captains (sun te chiliarchois). Chiliarchs, each a leader of a thousand. There were five cohorts of soldiers stationed in Caesarea. And the principal men of the city (kai andrasin tois kat' exochên). The use of kat' exochên, like our French phrase par excellence, occurs here only in the N.T., and not in the ancient Greek, but it is found in inscriptions of the first century A.D. (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary). Exochê in medical writers is any protuberance or swelling. Cf. our phrase "outstanding men." At the command of Festus (keleusantos tou Phêstou). Genitive absolute again, "Festus having commanded."

Verse 24

Which are here present with us (hoi sunparontes hêmin). Present articular participle of sunpareimi (only here in N.T.) with associative instrumental case hêmin. Made suit to me (enetuchon moi). Second aorist active indicative of entugchanô, old verb to fall in with a person, to go to meet for consultation or supplication as here. Common in old Greek and Koin,. Cf. Rom 8:27, 34. See enteuxis (petition) 1Ti 2:1. Papyri give many examples of the technical sense of enteuxis as petition (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 121). Some MSS. have plural here enetuchon rather than the singular enetuchen. Crying (boôntes). Yelling and demanding with loud voices. That he ought not to live any longer (mê dein auton zêin mêketi). Indirect command (demand) with the infinitive dein for dei (it is necessary). The double negative (mê--mêketi) with zêin intensifies the demand.

Verse 25

But I found (egô de katelabomên). Second aorist middle of katalambanô, to lay hold of, to grasp, to comprehend as in Acts 4:13; Acts 10:34. That he had committed nothing worthy of death (mêden axion auton thanatou peprachenai). Perfect active infinitive of prassô in indirect assertion with negative mê and accusative auton of general reference, the usual idiom. Verse Acts 25:25 repeats the statement in verse Acts 25:21, perhaps for the benefit of the assembled dignitaries.

Verse 26

No certain thing (asphales ti--ou). Nothing definite or reliable (a privative, sphallô, to trip). All the charges of the Sanhedrin slipped away or were tripped up by Paul. Festus confesses that he had nothing left and thereby convicts himself of gross insincerity in his proposal to Paul in verse Acts 25:9 about going up to Jerusalem. By his own statement he should have set Paul free. The various details here bear the marks of the eyewitness. Luke was surely present and witnessed this grand spectacle with Paul as chief performer. Unto my lord (tôi kuriôi). Augustus (Octavius) and Tiberius refused the title of kurios (lord) as too much like rex (king) and like master and slave, but the servility of the subjects gave it to the other emperors who accepted it (Nero among them). Antoninus Pius put it on his coins. Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 105) gives an ostrakon dated Aug. 4, A.D. 63 with the words "in the year nine of Nero the lord" (enatou Nerônôs tou kuriou). Deissmann (op. cit., pp. 349ff.) runs a most interesting parallel "between the cult of Christ and the cult of Caesar in the application of the term kurios, lord" in ostraca, papyri, inscriptions. Beyond a doubt Paul has all this fully in mind when he says in 1Co 12:3 that "no one is able to say Kurios Iêsous except in the Holy Spirit" (cf. also Php 2:11). The Christians claimed this word for Christ and it became the test in the Roman persecutions as when Polycarp steadily refused to say "Lord Caesar" and insisted on saying "Lord Jesus" when it meant his certain death. Before you (eph' humôn). The whole company. In no sense a new trial, but an examination in the presence of these prominent men to secure data and to furnish entertainment and pleasure to Agrippa (verse Acts 25:22). Especially before thee (malista epi sou). Out of courtesy. It was the main reason as verse Acts 25:22 shows. Agrippa was a Jew and Festus was glad of the chance to see what he thought of Paul's case. After examination had (tês anakriseôs genomenês). Genitive absolute, "the examination having taken place." Anakrisis from anakrinô (cf. Acts 12:19; Acts 24:8; Acts 28:18) is a legal term for preliminary examination. Only here in the N.T. Inscriptions and papyri give it as examination of slaves or other property. That I may have somewhat to write (hopôs schô ti grapsô). Ingressive aorist subjunctive schô (may get) with hopôs (final particle like hina). Ti grapsô in indirect question after schô is either future indicative or aorist subjunctive (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1045). Festus makes it plain that this is not a "trial," but an examination for his convenience to help him out of a predicament.

Verse 27

Unreasonable (alogon). Old word from a privative and logos (reason, speech). "Without reason" as of animals (Jude 1:10; 2Pe 2:12), "contrary to reason" here. These the only N.T. instances and in harmony with ancient usage. In sending (pemponta). Note accusative case with the infinitive sêmânai though moi (dative) just before. Cf. same variation in Acts 15:22; Acts 22:17. Signify (sêmânai). First aorist active infinitive (not sêmênai, the old form) of sêmainô, to give a sign (sêmeion). The charges (tas aitias). This naive confession of Festus reveals how unjust has been his whole treatment of Paul. He had to send along with the appeal of Paul litterae dimissoriae (apostoli) which would give a statement of the case (Page).

Thou art permitted (epitrepetai soi). Literally, It is permitted thee. As if Agrippa were master of ceremonies instead of Festus. Agrippa as a king and guest presides at the grand display while Festus has simply introduced Paul. For thyself (huper seautou). Some MSS. have peri (concerning). Paul is allowed to speak in his own behalf. No charges are made against him. In fact, Festus has admitted that he has no real proof of any charges. Stretched forth his hand (ekteinas tèn cheira). Dramatic oratorical gesture (not for silence as in Acts 12:17; Acts 13:16) with the chain still upon it (verse Acts 26:29) linking him to the guard. First aorist active participle of ekteinô, to stretch out. Made his defence (apelogeito). Inchoative imperfect of apologeomai (middle), "began to make his defence." This is the fullest of all Paul's defences. He has no word of censure of his enemies or of resentment, but seizes the opportunity to preach Christ to such a distinguished company which he does with "singular dignity" (Furneaux). He is now bearing the name of Christ

"before kings" (Acts 9:15). In general Paul follows the line of argument of the speech on the stairs (chapter Acts 22:1 ff.).

Verse 2

I think myself happy (hêgêmai emauton makarion). See on Mat 5:3 for makarios. Blass notes that Paul, like Tertullus, begins with captatio benevolentiae, but absque adulatione. He says only what he can truthfully speak. For hêgêmai see Php 3:7; 1Ti 6:1 (perfect middle indicative of hêgeomai), I have considered. That I am to make my defence (mellôn apologeisthai). Literally, "being about to make my defence." Whereof I am accused (hôn egkaloumai). Genitive with egkaloumai as in Acts 19:40 or by attraction from accusative of relative (ha) to case of antecedent (pantôn).

Verse 3

Especially because thou art expert (malista gnôstên onta se). Or like the margin, "because thou art especially expert," according as malista is construed. Gnôstên is from ginôskô and means a knower, expert, connoisseur. Plutarch uses it and Deissmann (Light, etc., p. 367) restores it in a papyrus. Agrippa had the care of the temple, the appointment of the high priest, and the care of the sacred vestments. But the accusative onta se gives trouble here coming so soon after sou (genitive with epi). Some MSS. insert epistamenos or eidôs (knowing) but neither is genuine. Page takes it as "governed by the sense of thinking or considering." Knowling considers it an anacoluthon. Buttmann held it to be an accusative absolute after the old Greek idiom. Tuchon is such an instance though used as an adverb (1Co 16:6). It is possible that one exists in Eph 1:18. See other examples discussed in Robertson's Grammar, pp. 490f. Customs and questions (ethôn te kai zêtêmatôn). Both consuetudinum in practicis and quaestionum in theoreticis (Bengel). Agrippa was qualified to give Paul an understanding and a sympathetic hearing. Paul understands perfectly the grand-stand play of the whole performance, but he refused to be silent and chose to use this opportunity, slim as it seemed, to get a fresh hearing for his own case and to present the claims of Christ to this influential man. His address is a masterpiece of noble apologetic. Patiently (makrothumôs). Adverb from makrothumos. Only here in the N.T., though makrothumia occurs several times. Vulgate has longanimiter. Long spirit, endurance, opposite of impatience. So Paul takes his time.

Verse 4

My manner of life (tên men oun biôsin mou). With men oun Paul passes from the captatio benevolentiae (verses Acts 26:1, 2) "to the narratio or statement of his case" (Page). Biôsis is from bioô (1Pe 4:2) and that from bios (course of life). This is the only instance of biôsis yet found except the Prologue (10) of Ecclesiasticus and an inscription given in Ramsay's Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia, Vol II, p. 650. Know (isâsi). Literary form instead of the vernacular Koin, oidasin. Paul's early life in Tarsus and Jerusalem was an open book to all Jews.

Verse 5

Having knowledge of me from the first (proginôskontes me anôthen). Literally, "knowing me beforehand" (both pro and anôthen), from the beginning of Paul's public education in Jerusalem (Knowing). Cf. 2Pe 3:17. If they be willing to testify (ean thelôsin marturein). Condition of third class (ean and subjunctive). A neat turning of the tables on the distinguished audience about Paul's Jerusalem reputation before his conversion. After the straitest sect (tên akribestatên hairesin). This is a true superlative (not elative) and one of the three (also hagiôtatos, Jude 1:20, timiôtatos Rev 18:12; Rev 21:11) superlatives in -tatos in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 279f., 670), though common enough in the LXX and the papyri. Hairesin (choosing) is properly used here with Pharisees (Josephus, Life, 38). Religion (thrêskeias). From thrêskeuô and this from thrêskos (Jas 1:26), old word for religious worship or discipline, common in the papyri and inscriptions (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary) for reverent worship, not mere external ritual. In N.T. only here, Jas 1:26; Col 2:18. I lived a Pharisee (ezêsa Pharisaïos). Emphatic position. Paul knew the rules of the Pharisees and played the game to the full (Gal 1:14; Php 3:5). The Talmud makes it plain what the life of a Pharisee was. Paul had become one of the leaders and stars of hope for his sect.

Verse 6

And now (kai nun). Sharp comparison between his youth and the present. To be judged for the hope (ep' elpidi--krinomenos). The hope of the resurrection and of the promised Messiah (Acts 13:32). Page calls verses Acts 26:6-8 a parenthesis in the course of Paul's argument by which he shows that his life in Christ is a real development of the best in Pharisaism. He does resume his narrative in verse Acts 26:9, but verses Acts 26:6-8 are the core of his defence already presented in Gal 3:1-29; Rom 9:1-11:36 where he proves that the children of faith are the real seed of Abraham.

Verse 7

Our twelve tribes (to dôdekaphulon hêmôn). A word found only here in N.T. and in Christian and Jewish writings, though dôdekamênon (twelve month) is common in the papyri and dekaphulos (ten tribes) in Herodotus. Paul's use of this word for the Jewish people, like Jas 1:1 (tais dôdeka phulais, the twelve tribes), shows that Paul had no knowledge of any "lost ten tribes." There is a certain national pride and sense of unity in spite of the dispersion (Page). Earnestly (en ekteneiâi). A late word from ekteinô, to stretch out, only here in N.T., but in papyri and inscriptions. Page refers to Simeon and Anna (Luke 2:25-28) as instances of Jews looking for the coming of the Messiah. Note the accusative of nukta kai hêmëran as in Acts 20:31. Hope to attain (elpizei katantêsai). This Messianic hope had been the red thread running through Jewish history. Today, alas, it is a sadly worn thread for Jews who refuse to see the Messiah in Jesus. I am accused by Jews (egkaloumai hupo Ioudaiôn). The very word used in Acts 23:28 (enekaloun) which see, and by Jews of all people in the world whose mainspring was this very "hope." It is a tremendously effective turn.

Verse 8

Incredible with you (apiston par' humin). This old word apiston (a privative and pistos) means either unfaithful (Luke 12:46), unbelieving (John 20:27), or unbelievable as here). Paul turns suddenly from Agrippa to the audience (par' humin, plural), most of whom were probably Gentiles and scouted the doctrine of the resurrection as at Athens (Acts 17:32). If God doth raise the dead (ei ho theos nekrous egeirei). Condition of the first class assuming that God does raise dead people. Only God can do it. This rhetorical question needs no answer, though the narrative resumed in verse Acts 26:9 does it in a way.

Verse 9

I verily thought with myself (egô men oun edoxa emautôi). Personal construction instead of the impersonal, a touch of the literary style. Paul's "egoism" is deceived as so often happens. I ought (dein). Infinitive the usual construction with dokeô. Necessity and a sense of duty drove Paul on even in this great sin (see on Acts 23:1), a common failing with persecutors. Contrary (enantia). Old word (adjective), over against, opposite (Acts 27:4), then hostile to as here.

Verse 10

I both shut up many (pollous te katekleisa). Effective aorist active of katakleiô, old word to shut down like a trap door, in N.T. only here and Luke 3:20. Double use of te (both--and). Having received authority from the chief priests (tên para tôn archiereôn exousian labôn). "The authority," he says. Paul was the official persecutor of the saints under the direction of the Sanhedrin. He mentions "chief priests" (Sadducees), though a Pharisee himself. Both parties were co-operating against the saints. And when they were put to death (anairoumenôn te autôn). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of anaireô. I gave my vote against them (katênegka psêphon). "I cast down my pebble" (a black one). The ancient Greeks used white pebbles for acquittal (Rev 2:17), black ones for condemnation as here (the only two uses of the word in the N.T.). Paul's phrase (not found elsewhere) is more vivid than the usual katapsêphizô for voting. They literally cast the pebbles into the urn. Cf. sumpsêphizô in Acts 19:19, sugkatapsephizo in Acts 1:26. If Paul's language is taken literally here, he was a member of the Sanhedrin and so married when he led the persecution. That is quite possible, though he was not married when he wrote 1Co 7:7, but a widower. It is possible to take the language figuratively for approval, but not so natural.

Verse 11

Punishing (timôrôn). Old word timôreô originally to render help, to succor (timôros, from timê and ouros), then to avenge (for honour). In N.T. only here and Acts 22:5. I strove to make them blaspheme (ênagkazon blasphêmein). Conative imperfect active of anagkazô, old verb from anagkê (necessity, compulsion). The tense, like the imperfect in Mat 3:14; Luke 1:59, leaves room to hope that Paul was not successful in this effort, for he had already said that he brought many "unto death" (Acts 22:4). I persecuted (ediôkon). Imperfect active again, repeated attempts. The old verb diôkô was used to run after or chase game and then to chase enemies. The word "persecute" is the Latin persequor, to follow through or after. It is a vivid picture that Paul here paints of his success in hunting big game, a grand heresy hunt. Even unto foreign cities (kai eis exô poleis). We know of Damascus, and Paul evidently planned to go to other cities outside of Palestine and may even have done so before the fateful journey to Damascus.

Verse 12

Whereupon (en hois). "In which things" (affairs of persecution), "on which errand." Cf. Acts 24:18. Paul made them leave Palestine (Acts 11:19) and followed them beyond it (Acts 9:2). With the authority and commission (met' exousias kai epitropês). Not merely "authority" (exousia), but express appointment (epitropê, old word, but here only in N.T., derived from epitropos, steward, and that from epitrepô, to turn over to, to commit).

Verse 13

At midday (hêmeras mesês). Genitive of time and idiomatic use of mesos, in the middle of the day, more vivid than mesêmbrian (Acts 22:6). Above the brightness of the sun (huper tèn lamprotêta tou hêliou). Here alone not in Acts 9:1ff.; Acts 22:1ff., though implied in Acts 9:3; Acts 22:6, "indicating the supernatural character of the light" (Knowling). Luke makes no effort to harmonize the exact phrases here with those in the other accounts and Paul here (verse Acts 26:16) blends together what Jesus said to him directly and the message of Jesus through Ananias (Acts 9:15). The word lamprotês, old word, is here alone in the N.T. Shining round about me (perilampsan me). First aorist active participle of perilampô, common Koin, verb, in N.T. only here and Luke 2:9.

Verse 14

When we were all fallen (pantôn katapesontôn hêmôn). Genitive absolute with second aorist active participle of katapiptô. In the Hebrew language (têi Ebraidi dialektôi). Natural addition here, for Paul is speaking in Greek, not Aramaic as in Acts 22:2. It is hard for thee to kick against the goad (sklêron soi pros kentra laktizein). Genuine here, but not in chapters Acts 26:9, 22. A common proverb as Aeschylus Ag. 1624: Pros kentra mê laktize. "It is taken from an ox that being pricked with a goad kicks and receives a severer wound" (Page). Cf. the parables of Jesus (Mat 13:35). Blass observes that Paul's mention of this Greek and Latin proverb is an indication of his culture. Besides he mentions (not invents) it here rather than in chapter Acts 26:22 because of the culture of this audience. Kentron means either sting as of bees (II Macc. 14:19) and so of death (1Co 15:55) or an iron goad in the ploughman's hand as here (the only two N.T. examples). Note plural here (goads) and laktizein is present active infinitive so that the idea is "to keep on kicking against goads." This old verb means to kick with the heel (adverb lax, with the heel), but only here in the N.T. There is a papyrus example of kicking (laktizô) with the feet against the door.

Verse 16

Arise and stand (anastêthi kai stêthi). "Emphatic assonance" (Page). Second aorist active imperative of compound verb (anistêmi) and simplex (histêmi). "Stand up and take a stand." Have I appeared unto thee (ôphthên soi). First aorist passive indicative of horaô. See on Luke 22:43. To appoint thee (procheirisasthai se). See 3:30; Acts 22:14 for this verb. Both of the things wherein thou hast seen me (hôn te eides me). The reading me (not in all MSS.) makes it the object of eides (didst see) and hôn is genitive of ha (accusative of general reference) attracted to the case of the unexpressed antecedent toutôn. Paul is thus a personal eyewitness of the Risen Christ (Luke 1:1; 1Co 4:1; 1Co 9:1). And of the things wherein I will appear unto thee (hôn te ophthêsomai soi). Here again hôn is genitive of the accusative (general reference) relative ha attracted to the case of the antecedent toutôn or ekeinôn as before. But ophthêsomai is first future passive of horaô and cannot be treated as active or middle. Page takes it to mean "the visions in which I shall be seen by you," the passive form bringing out the agency of God. See those in Acts 18:9; Acts 23:11; 2Co 12:2. The passive voice, however, like apekrithên and ephobêthên, did become sometimes transitive in the Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, p. 819).

Verse 17

Delivering thee (exairoumenos se). Present middle participle of exaireô, old verb and usually so rendered, but the old Greek also uses it for "choose" as also in LXX (Isa 48:10). The papyri give examples of both meanings and either makes good sense here. God was continually rescuing Paul "out of the hands of Jews and Gentiles and Paul was a chosen vessel" (Acts 9:15). Modern scholars are also divided.

Verse 18

To open (anoixai). First aorist active infinitive of purpose. That they may turn (tou epistrepsai). Another infinitive of purpose first aorist active (genitive case and articular), epexegetic to anoixai. That they may receive (tou labein). Another genitive articular infinitive of purpose subordinate (epexegetic) to tou epistrepsai. Sanctified by faith in me (hêgiasmenois pistei têi eis eme). Perfect passive participle of hagiazô, instrumental case of pistei, article before eis eme ("by faith, that in me"). These important words of Jesus to Paul give his justification to this cultured audience for his response to the command of Jesus. This was the turning point in Paul's career and it was a step forward and upward.

Verse 19

Wherefore (hothen). This relational adverb (cf. Acts 14:26; Acts 28:13) gathers up all that Paul has said. I was not disobedient (ouk egenomên apeithês). Litotes again, "I did not become (second aorist middle indicative of ginomai) disobedient" (apeithês, old word already in Luke 1:17). Unto the heavenly vision (têi ouraniôi optasiâi). A later form of opsis, from optazô, in LXX, and in N.T.

(Luke 1:22; Luke 24:23; Acts 26:19; 2Co 12:1). Only time that Paul uses it about seeing Christ on the Damascus road, but no reflection on the reality of the event.

Verse 20

But declared (alla apêggellon). Imperfect active of apaggellô, repeatedly. Throughout all the country of Judea (pâsan te tèn chôran tês Ioudaias). The accusative here in the midst of the datives (tois en Damaskôi, Ierosolumois, tois ethnesin) seems strange and Page feels certain that eis should be here even though absent in Aleph A B. But the accusative of extent of space will explain it (Robertson, Grammar, p. 469). Doing works worthy of repentance (axia tês metanoias erga prassontas). Accusative case of present active participle prassontas because of the implied autous with the present infinitive metanoein (repent) and epistrephein (turn), though the dative prassousin could have been used to agree with ethnesin (Gentiles). Cf. Mat 3:8 for similar language used of the Baptist. Paul, the greatest of theologians, was an interesting practical preacher.

Verse 21

Assayed to kill me (epeirônto diacheirisasthai). Conative imperfect middle of peiraô, the old form of the later Koin, peirazô so common in the Koin,, but in N.T. here only. Some MSS. have it in Acts 9:26; Heb 4:15. The old verb diacheirizô, to take in hand, middle to lay hands on, to slay, occurs in N.T. only here and Acts 5:30 which see.

Verse 22

Having therefore obtained (oun tuchôn). Second aorist active participle of old verb tugchanô. The help that is from God (epikourias tês apo tou theou). Old word from epikoureô, to aid, and that from epikouros, ally, assister. Only here in N.T. God is Paul's ally. All of the plots of the Jews against Paul had failed so far. I stand (hestêka). Second perfect of histêmi, to place, intransitive to stand. Picturesque word (Page) of Paul's stability and fidelity (cf. Php 4:1; Eph 6:13). Both to small and great (mikrôi te kai megalôi). Dative singular (rather than instrumental, taking marturooumenos middle, not passive) and use of te kai links the two adjectives together in an inclusive way. These two adjectives in the singular (representative singular rather than plural) can apply to age (young and old) or to rank (Rev 11:18) as is specially suitable here with Festus and Agrippa present. In Acts 8:10 (Heb 8:11) the phrase explains pantes (all). Saying nothing but what (ouden ektos legôn hôn). "Saying nothing outside of those things which." The ablative relative hôn is attracted into the case of the unexpressed antecedent toutôn and so ablative after ektos (adverbial preposition common in LXX, the papyri. In N.T. here and 1Co 6:18; 1Co 15:27; 2Co 12:2). Cf. Luke 16:29 about Moses and the prophets.

Verse 23

How that the Christ must suffer (ei pathêtos ho Christos). Literally, "if the Messiah is subject to suffering." Ei can here mean "whether" as in Heb 7:15. This use of a verbal in -tos for capability or possibility occurs in the N.T. alone in pathêtos (Robertson, Grammar, p. 157). This word occurs in Plutarch in this sense. It is like the Latin patibilis and is from pasch". Here alone in N.T. Paul is speaking from the Jewish point of view. Most rabbis had not rightly understood Isa 53:1ff. When the Baptist called Jesus "the Lamb of God" (John 1:29) it was a startling idea. It is not then "must suffer" here, but "can suffer." The Cross of Christ was a stumbling-block to the rabbis. How that he first by the resurrection of the dead (ei prôtos ex anastaseôs nekrôn). Same construction with ei (whether). This point Paul had often discussed with the Jews: "whether he (the Messiah) by a resurrection of dead people." Others had been raised from the dead, but Christ is the first (prôtos) who arose from the dead and no longer dies (Rom 6:19) and proclaims light (phôs mellei kataggellein). Paul is still speaking from the Jewish standpoint: "is about to (going to) proclaim light." See verse Acts 26:18 for "light" and Luke 2:32. Both to the people and to the Gentiles (tôi te laôi kai tois ethnesin). See verse Acts 26:17. It was at the word Gentiles (ethnê) that the mob lost control of themselves in the speech from the stairs (Acts 22:21). So it is here, only not because of that word, but because of the word "resurrection" (anastasis).

Verse 24

As he thus made his defence (tauta autou apologoumenou). Genitive absolute again with present middle participle. Paul was still speaking when Festus interrupted him in great excitement. With a loud voice (megalêi têi phônêi). Associative instrumental case showing manner (Robertson, Grammar, p. 530) and the predicate use of the adjective, "with the voice loud" (elevated). Thou art mad (mainêi). Old verb for raving. See also John 10:20; Acts 12:15; 1Co 14:23. The enthusiasm of Paul was too much for Festus and then he had spoken of visions and resurrection from the dead (verse Acts 26:8). "Thou art going mad" (linear present), Festus means. Thy much learning doth turn thee to madness (ta polla se grammata eis manian peritrepei). "Is turning thee round." Old verb peritrepô, but only here in N.T. Festus thought that Paul's "much learning" (= "many letters," cf. John 7:15 of Jesus) of the Hebrew Scriptures to which he had referred was turning his head to madness (wheels in his head) and he was going mad right before them all. The old word mania (our mania, frenzy, cf. maniac) occurs here only in N.T. Note unusual position of se between polla and grammata (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 418, 420)

Verse 25

But speak forth (alla apophtheggomai). Verb for dignified and elevated discourse, a word from the literary Koin., not the vernacular. In N.T. only here and Acts 2:4, 14 which see. It occurs three times in Vettius Valens in a "mantic" sense. Paul was not ruffled by the rude and excited interruption of Festus, but speaks with perfect courtesy in his reply "words of truth and soberness." The old word sôphrosunê (soundness of mind) from sôphrôn (and that from sôs and phrên) is directly opposed to "madness" (mania) and in N.T. occurs only here and 1Ti 2:15.

Verse 26

For the king knoweth of these things (epistatai gar peri toutôn ho basileus). Epistatai (present middle probably Ionic form of ephistêmi) is a literary word and suits well here (cf. Acts 24:10). Freely (parrêsiazomenos). Present middle participle, speaking fully, making a clean breast of it. From parrêsia (pan, rhêsis) (cf. Acts 13:46). Is hidden from him (lanthanein auton). Escapes his notice. Infinitive in indirect discourse after peithomai (I am persuaded).

Verse 27

I know that thou believest (oida hoti pisteueis). Paul had "cornered" Agrippa by this direct challenge. As the Jew in charge of the temple he was bound to confess his faith in the prophets. But Paul had interpreted the prophets about the Messiah in a way that fell in with his claim that Jesus was the Messiah risen from the dead. To say, "Yes" would place himself in Paul's hands. To say "No" would mean that he did not believe the prophets. Agrippa had listened with the keenest interest, but he slipped out of the coils with adroitness and a touch of humour.

Verse 28

With but little persuasion thou wouldest fain make me a Christian (en oligôi me peitheis Christianon poiêsai). The Authorized rendering is impossible: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." En oligôi does not mean "almost." That would require oligou, par' oligon, or dei oligou. It is not clear, however, precisely what en oligôi does mean. It may refer to time (in little time) or a short cut, but that does not suit well en megalôi in verse Acts 26:29. Tyndale and Crammer rendered it "somewhat" (in small measure or degree). There are, alas, many "somewhat" Christians. Most likely the idea is "in (or with) small effort you are trying to persuade (peitheis, conative present active indicative) me in order to make me a Christian." This takes the infinitive poiêsai to be purpose (Page renders it by "so as") and thus avoids trying to make poiêsai like genesthai (become). The aorist is punctiliar action for single act, not "perfect." The tone of Agrippa is ironical, but not unpleasant. He pushes it aside with a shrug of the shoulders. The use of "Christian" is natural here as in the other two instances (Acts 11:26; 1Pe 4:16).

Verse 29

I would to God (euxaimên an tôi theôi). Conclusion of fourth-class condition (optative with an), undetermined with less likelihood, the so-called potential optative (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). Polite and courteous wish (first aorist middle optative of euchomai). Whether with little or with much (kai en mikrôî kai en megalôî). Literally, "both in little and in great," or "both with little and with great pains" or "both in some measure and in great measure." Paul takes kindly the sarcasm of Agrippa. Such as I am (toioutous hopoios kai egô eimi). Accusative toioutous with the infinitive genesthai. Paul uses these two qualitative pronouns instead of repeating the word "Christian." Except these bonds (parektos tôn desmôn toutôn). Ablative case with parektos (late preposition for the old parek). Paul lifts his right manacled hand with exquisite grace and good feeling.

Verse 30

Rose up (anestê). Second aorist active of anistêmi (intransitive), agreeing only with "the king" (ho basileus). The entertainment was over.

Verse 31

They spake one to another (elaloun pros allêlous). Imperfect active, describing the eager conversation of the dignitaries about Paul's wonderful speech. Nothing worthy of death or bonds (ouden thanatou ê desmôn axion). This is the unanimous conclusion of all these dignitaries (Romans, Jews, Greeks) as it was of Festus before (Acts 25:25). But Paul had not won any of them to Christ. The conclusion leaves Festus in a predicament. Why had he not set Paul free before this?

Verse 32

This man might have been set at liberty (Apoleluthai edunato ho anthrôpos houtos). Conclusion of the second class condition (determined as unfulfilled) without an as in Acts 24:19 because of edunato (verb of possibility, Robertson, Grammar, p. 1014). Note perfect passive infinitive apoleluthai from apoluô. He certainly "could have been set free." Why was it not done? If he had not appealed unto Caesar (ei mê epekeklêto Kaisara). Condition of the second class with the past perfect middle indicative (op. cit., p. 1015) of epikaleô (cf. Acts 25:11). But Paul only appealed to Caesar after Festus had tried to shift him back to Jerusalem and had refused to set him free in Caesarea. Festus comes out with no honour in the case. Since Agrippa was a favourite at court perhaps Festus would be willing to write favourably to Caesar.

Verse 1

That we should sail (tou apoplein hêmas). This genitive articular infinitive with ekrithê like the LXX construction translating the Hebrew infinitive construct is awkward in Greek. Several similar examples in Luke 17:1; Acts 10:25; Acts 20:3 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1068). Luke alone uses this old verb in N.T. He uses nine compounds of pleô, to sail. Note the reappearance of "we" in the narrative. It is possible, of course, that Luke was not with Paul during the series of trials at Caesarea, or at least, not all the time. But it is natural for Luke to use "we" again because he and Aristarchus are travelling with Paul. In Caesarea Paul was the centre of the action all the time whether Luke was present or not. The great detail and minute accuracy of Luke's account of this voyage and shipwreck throw more light upon ancient seafaring than everything else put together. Smith's Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul is still a classic on the subject. Though so accurate in his use of sea terms, yet Luke writes like a landsman, not like a sailor. Besides, the character of Paul is here revealed in a remarkable fashion. They delivered (paredidou). Imperfect active ômega form rather than the old -mi form paredidosan as in Acts 4:33, from paradidômi. Perhaps the imperfect notes the continuance of the handing over. Certain other prisoners (tinas heterous desmôtas). Bound (desmôtas) like Paul, but not necessarily appellants to Caesar, perhaps some of them condemned criminals to amuse the Roman populace in the gladiatorial shows, most likely pagans though heterous does not have to mean different kind of prisoners from Paul. Of the Augustan band (speirês Sebastês). Note Ionic genitive speirês, not speiras. See on Mat 27:1; Acts 10:1. Cohortis Augustae. We do not really know why this cohort is called "Augustan." It may be that it is part of the imperial commissariat (frumentarii) since Julius assumes chief authority in the grain ship (verse Acts 27:11). These legionary centurions when in Rome were called peregrini (foreigners) because their work was chiefly in the provinces. This man Julius may have been one of them.

Verse 2

In a ship of Adramyttium (ploiôi Hadramuntênôi). A boat belonging to Adramyttium, a city in Mysia in the province of Asia. Probably a small coasting vessel on its way home for the winter stopping at various places (topous). Julius would take his chances to catch another ship for Rome. The usual way to go to Rome was to go to Alexandria and so to Rome, but no large ship for Alexandria was at hand. We put to sea (anêchthêmen). First aorist passive of anagô, usual word in Luke. Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us (ontos sun hêmin Aristarchou Makedonos Thessalonikeôs). Genitive absolute. Ramsay suggests that Luke and Aristarchus accompanied Paul as his slaves since they would not be allowed to go as his friends. But Luke was Paul's physician and may have gained permission on that score.

Verse 3

The next day (têi heterâi). Locative case with hêmerâi understood. We touched (katêchthêmen). First aorist passive of katagô, the usual term for "coming down" from the seas as anagô above (and verse Acts 27:4) is for "going up" to sea. So it looks to sailors. Sidon was 67 miles from Caesarea, the rival of Tyre, with a splendid harbour. The ship stopped here for trade. Treated Paul kindly (philanthrôpôs tôi Paulôi chrêsamenos). "Using (chrêsamenos, first aorist middle participle of chraomai, to use) Paul (instrumental case used with this verb) kindly" (philanthrôpôs, "philanthropically," adverb from phil-anthrôpos, love of mankind). He was kindly to Paul throughout the voyage (verse Acts 27:43; Acts 28:16), taking a personal interest in his welfare. Refresh himself (epimeleias tuchein). Second aorist active infinitive of tugchanô (to obtain) with the genitive epimeleias, old word from epimelês, careful, only here in the N.T. Whether it was mere hospitality we do not know. It may have been medical attention required because of Paul's long confinement. This is Paul's first visit to Sidon, but Christians were already in Phoenicia (Acts 11:19) and so Paul had "friends" here.

Verse 4

We sailed under the lee of Cyprus (hupepleusamen tēn Kupron). First aorist active indicative of hupopleō, to sail under. Cyprus was thus on the left between the ship and the wind from the northwest, under the protection of Cyprus. Because the winds were contrary (dia to tous anemous einai enantious). The articular infinitive after dia and the accusative of general reference (anemous) with predicate accusative (enantious, facing them, in their very teeth if they went that way). The Etesian winds were blowing from the northwest so that they could not cut straight across from Sidon to Patara with Cyprus on the right. They must run behind Cyprus and hug the shore of Cilicia and Pamphylia.

Verse 5

When we had sailed across (diapleusantes). First aorist active participle of diapleō (another compound of pleō). The sea which is off Cilicia and Pamphylia (to pelagos to kata tēn Kilikian kai Pamphulian). Pelagos is properly the high sea as here. In Mat 18:6 (which see) Jesus uses it of "the depth of the sea." Only these examples in the N.T. The current runs westward along the coast of Cilicia and Pamphylia and the land would protect from the wind. We came to Myra of Lycia (katēlthamen eis Murra tēs Lukias). Literally, "We came down." This town was two and a half miles from the coast of Lycia. The port Andriace had a fine harbour and did a large grain business. No disciples are mentioned here nor at Lasea, Melita, Syracuse, Rhegium.

Verse 6

Sailing for Italy (pleon eis tēn Italian). This was the opportunity for which Lysias had been looking. So he put (enebibasen, first aorist active of embibazō, to cause to enter. Cf. epibantes in verse Acts 27:2) prisoners and soldiers on board. This was a ship of Alexandria bound for Rome, a grain ship (Acts 27:38) out of its course because of the wind. Such grain ships usually carried passengers.

Verse 7

When we had sailed slowly (braduploountes). Present active participle of braduploeô (bradus, slow, plous, voyage). Literally, "sailing slowly," not "having or had sailed slowly." Only here and in Artemidorus (sec. cent. A.D.). It may mean "tacking" before the wind. Polybius uses tachuploeô, to sail swiftly. Many days (en hikanais hêmerais). See on Luke 7:6 for hikanos. Literally, "in considerable days." With difficulty (molis). Used in old Greek, like mogis (Luke 9:39) from molos, toil (see Acts 14:18). Over against Cnidus (kata tēn Knidon). "Down along Cnidus." A hundred and thirty miles from Myra, the southwest point of Asia Minor and the western coast. Here the protection of the land from the northwest wind ceased. The wind not further suffering us (mê proseôntos hêmâs tou anemou). Genitive absolute with present active participle of proseaô, one of the few words still "not found elsewhere" (Thayer). Regular negative mê with participles. They could not go on west as they had been doing since leaving Myra. We sailed under the lee of Crete (hupepleusamen tēn Krêtēn). See under verse Acts 27:4. Instead of going to the right of Crete as the straight course would have been they sailed southwest with Crete to their right and got some protection against the wind there. Over against Salmone (kata Salmônēn). Off Cape Salmone, a promontory on the east of the island.

Verse 8

Coasting along (paralegomenoi). Present middle participle of paralegô, to lay beside, not from legô, to collect or legô, to say. Diodorus Siculus uses paralegomai in precisely this sense of coasting along, like Latin legere oram. In N.T. only here and verse Acts 27:13. Fair Havens (Kalous Limenas). This harbour is named Kalus Limeonas, a small bay two miles east of Cape Matala. It opens to the East and Southeast, but is not fit to winter in. This harbour would protect them for a time from the winds. The city of Lasea (polis Lasea). Neither Lasea nor Fair Havens is mentioned by any ancient writer, two of the hundred cities of Crete.

Verse 9

Where much time was spent (Hikanou chronou diagenomenou). Genitive absolute again with second aorist middle participle of diaginomai, to come in between (dia). "Considerable time intervening," since they became weatherbound in this harbour, though some take it since they left Caesarea. And the voyage was now dangerous (kai ontos êdê episphalous). Genitive absolute, "and the voyage being already (êdê=Latin jam) dangerous" (old word from epi and sphallô, to trip, to fall, and so prone to fall, here only in N.T.). Because the Fast was now already gone by (dia to kai tèn nêsteian êdê parelêluthenai). Accusative (after dia) of the articular infinitive perfect active of parerchomai, to pass by, with the accusative of general reference (nêsteian, the great day of atonement of the Jews, Lev 16:29) occurring about the end of September. The ancients considered navigation on the Mediterranean unsafe from early October till the middle of March. In A.D. 59 the Fast occurred on Oct. 5. There is nothing strange in Luke using this Jewish note of time as in Acts 20:6 though a Gentile Christian. Paul did it also (1Co 16:8). It is no proof that Luke was a Jewish proselyte. We do not know precisely when the party left Caesarea (possibly in August), but in ample time to arrive in Rome before October if conditions had been more favourable. But the contrary winds had made the voyage very slow and difficult all the way (verse Acts 27:7) besides the long delay here in this harbour of Fair Havens. Paul admonished them (parênêi ho Paulos). Imperfect active of paraineô, old word to exhort from para and aineô, to praise (Acts 3:8), only here and verse Acts 27:22 in N.T. It is remarkable that a prisoner like Paul should venture to give advice at all and to keep on doing it (imperfect tense inchoative, began to admonish and kept on at it). Paul had clearly won the respect of the centurion and officers and also felt it to be his duty to give this unasked for warning. I perceive (theôrô). Old word from theôros, a spectator. See Luke 10:18. Paul does not here claim prophecy, but he had plenty of experience with three shipwrecks already (2Co 11:25) to justify his apprehension. Will be (mellein esesthai). Infinitive in indirect assertion followed by future infinitive after mellein in spite of hoti which would naturally call for present indicative mellei, an anacoluthon due to the long sentence (Robertson, Grammar, p. 478). With injury (meta hubreôs). An old word from huper (above, upper, like our "uppishness") and so pride, insult, personal injury, the legal word for personal assault (Page). Josephus (Ant. III. 6, 4) uses it of the injury of the elements. Loss (zêmian). Old word, opposite of kerdos, gain or profit (Php 3:7). Nowhere else in N.T. Lading (phortiou). Diminutive of phortos (from pherô, to bear) only in form. Common word, but in N.T. only here in literal sense, as metaphor in Mat 11:30; Mat 23:4; Luke 11:46; Gal 6:5. But also of our lives (alla kai tôn psuchôn). Common use of psuchê for life, originally "breath of life" (Acts 20:10), and also "soul" (Acts 14:2). Fortunately no lives were lost, though all else was. But this outcome was due to the special mercy of God for the sake of Paul (verse Acts 27:24), not to the wisdom of the officers in rejecting Paul's advice. Paul begins now to occupy the leading role in this marvellous voyage.

Verse 11

Gave more heed (mállon epeitheto). Imperfect middle of peithô, to yield to (with the dative case). The "Frumentarian" centurion ranked above the captain and owner. As a military officer the centurion was responsible for the soldiers, the prisoners, and the cargo of wheat. It was a government ship. Though the season was not advanced, the centurion probably feared to risk criticism in Rome for timidity when the wheat was so much needed in Rome (Knowling). To the master (tôi kubernêtei). Old word from kubernaô, to steer, and so steersman, pilot, sailing-master. Common in this sense in the papyri. In N.T. only here and Rev 18:17. And to the owner of the ship (kai tôi nauklêrôi). Old word compounded of naus and klêros and used for owner of the ship who acted as his own skipper or captain. The papyri examples (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary) all have the meaning "captain" rather than "owner."

Verse 12

Because the haven was not commodious to winter in (aneuthetou tou limenos huparchontos pros paracheimasion). Genitive absolute again present tense of huparchô: "The harbour being unfit (aneuthetou, this compound not yet found elsewhere, simplex in Luke 9:62; Luke 14:35; Heb 6:7) for wintering" (paracheimasia, only here in N.T., but in Polybius and Diodorus, in an inscription A.D. 48, from paracheimazô). The more part advised (hoi pleiones ethento boulên). Second aorist middle indicative of tithêmi, ancient idiom with boulên, to take counsel, give counsel. Lysias held a council of the officers of the ship on the issue raised by Paul. If by any means they could reach Phoenix and winter there (ei pôs dunainto katantêsantes eis Phoinika paracheimasai). The optative dunainto (present middle of dunamai) here with ei is a condition of the fourth class with the notion of purpose implied and indirect discourse (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). "We vote for going on the chance that we may be able" (Page). Phoenix is the town of palms (John 12:13), the modern Lutro, the only town in Crete on the southern coast with a harbour fit for wintering, though Wordsworth and Page argue for Phineka which suits Luke's description better. The verb paracheimazô, to winter, is from para and cheimôn (see also Acts 28:11). Used in several Koin, writers. Looking northeast and southeast (bleponta kata liba kai kata chôron). There are two ways of interpreting this language. Lips means the southwest wind and chôros the northwest wind. But what is the effect of kata with these words? Does it mean "facing" the wind? If so, we must read "looking southwest and northwest." But kata can mean down the line of the wind (the way the wind is blowing). If so, then it is proper to translate "looking northeast and southeast." This translation suits Lutro, the other suits Phoenike. Ramsay takes it to be Lutro, and suggests that sailors describe the harbour by the way it looks as they go into it (the subjectivity of the sailors) and that Luke so speaks and means Lutro which faces northeast and southeast. On the whole Lutro has the best of the argument.

Verse 13

When the south wind blew softly (hupopneusantos notou). Genitive absolute with aorist active participle of hupopneô, old verb to blow under, then to blow gently, here only in N.T. "A south wind having blown gently," in marked contrast to the violent northwest wind that they had faced so long. They were so sure of the wisdom of their decision that they did not even draw up the small boat attached by a rope to the vessel's stern (verse Acts 27:16). It was only some forty miles to Lutro. Their purpose (tês protheseôs, set before them, from protithêmi), genitive after krateô (kekratêkenai, perfect active infinitive in indirect discourse). They weighed anchor (ârantēs). First aorist active participle of airô, old verb used in technical sense with tas agkuras (anchors) understood as in Thucydides I. 52; II. 23, "having lifted the anchors." Page takes it simply as "moving." Sailed along Crete (parelegonto tēn Krētēn). Imperfect middle. See verse Acts 27:8, "were coasting along Crete." Close in shore (âsson). Comparative adverb of agki, near, and so "nearer" to shore. Only here in N.T.

Verse 14

After no long time (met' ou polu). Litotes again. Beat down from it (ebalen kat' autēs). Second aorist active indicative of ballô, to throw. Here "dashed" (intransitive). Autēs is in the ablative, not genitive case, beat "down from it" (Crete), not "against it or on it." (Robertson, Grammar, p. 606). Autēs cannot refer to ploion (boat) which is neuter. So the ablative case with kata as in Mark 5:13, Homer also. The Cretan mountains are over 7,000 feet high. A tempestuous wind which is called Euraquilo (anemos tuphônikos ho kaloumenos Eurakulôn). Tuphôn=tuphôs was used for the typhoon, a violent whirlwind (turbo) or squall. This word gives the character of the wind. The Eurakulôn (reading of Aleph A B against the Textus Receptus Eurokludôn) has not been found elsewhere. Blass calls it a hybrid word compounded of the Greek euros (east wind) and the Latin aquilo (northeast). It is made like euronotos (southeast). The Vulgate has euroaquilo. It is thus the east north east wind. Page considers Euroclydon to be a corruption of Euraquilo. Here the name gives the direction of the wind.

Verse 15

When the ship was caught (sunarpasthentos tou ploiou). Genitive absolute again with first aorist passive of sunarpazô, old word, in N.T. only Luke 8:29; Acts 6:12; Acts 19:29, and here. Graphic picture as if the ship was seized by a great monster. Face the wind (antophthalmein tōi anemōi). Dative case with the vivid infinitive of antophthalmeō from antophthalmos, looking in the eye, or eye to eye (anti, facing and ophthalmos, eye). Eyes were painted on the prows of vessels. The ship could not face the wind enough to get to Phoenix. Modern sailors talk of sailing into the eye of the wind. We were not able to look the wind in the eye. Koin, verb used by Polybius. Some MSS. have it in Acts 6:11, but only here in N.T. In Wisdom of Sol. 12:14 it is used of a prince who cannot look God in the face. Clement of Rome 34 uses it of an idle workman not able to look his employer in the face (Milligan and Moulton's Vocabulary). We gave way (epidontes). Second aorist active participle of epididômi, giving way to the wind. Were driven (epherometha). Imperfect passive of pherô, "we were being borne along." We "scudded before the gale" (Page). "The suddenness of the hurricane gave no time to furl the great mainsail" (Furneaux).

Verse 16

Running under the lee of (hupodramontes). Second aorist active participle of hupotrechô. Same use of hupo as in hupepleusamen (verses Acts 27:4, 8) for "under the lee", under the protection of. Nêsion is diminutive of nêsos, a small island. The MSS. vary between Cauda (B) and Claudia (Aleph). To secure the boat (perikrateis genesthai tês skaphês). "To become masters (perikrateis from peri and kratos, power over, found in Susannah and ecclesiastical writers, and here only in N.T.) of the boat ("dug out," like Indian boats, literally, from skaptô, to dig, old word, here only in N.T. and verses Acts 27:30, 32). The smooth water behind the little island enabled them to do this. When they had hoisted it up (hên arantes). "Which (the little boat) having hoisted up (arantes, verse Acts 27:13)." Even so it was "with difficulty" (molis). Perhaps the little boat was waterlogged. Used helps (boêtheiais echrônto). Imperfect middle of chraomai with instrumental case. The "helps" were ropes or chains, no doubt. Under-girding the ship (hupozônnuntes to ploion). Present active participle of hupozônnumi. Old verb, here only in N.T. Probably cables (hupozômata) or ropes were used under the hull of the ship laterally or even longitudinally, tightly secured on deck. This "frapping" was more necessary for ancient vessels because of the heavy mast. The little island made it possible to do this also. Lest we be cast upon the Syrtis (mê eis tèn Surtin ekpesôsin). Final clause after verb of fearing (phoboumenoi) with mê and the second aorist active subjunctive of ekpiptô, old verb to fall out or off, to be cast away. So here and verses Acts 27:26, 29, a classical use of the verb for a ship driven out of its course on to shoals or rocks (Page who cites Xenophon, Anab. VII. 5, 12). The Syrtis was the name for two quicksands between Carthage and Cyrenaica, this clearly being the Syrtis Major most dangerous because of the sandbanks (surtis, from surô). The wind would drive the ship right into this peril if something were not done. They lowered the gear (chaliasantes to skeuos). First aorist active participle of chalaô (cf. Luke 5:4 for lowering the nets). Skeuos means vessel or gear. They slackened or reduced sail, especially the mainsail, but leaving enough to keep the ship's head as close to the wind as was practicable. So were driven (houtôs epheronto). Imperfect passive indicative again as in verse Acts 27:15 with the addition of houtôs (thus). The ship was now fixed as near to the wind (E N E) as possible (seven points). That would enable the ship to go actually W by N and so avoid the quicksands. J. Smith has shown that, a day being lost around Cauda, the ship going 36 miles in 24 hours in 13 days would make 468 miles. The Island of Malta (Melita) is precisely in that direction (W by N) from Cauda and is 480 miles. Page sees a difficulty about this explanation of the steady drift of the ship in the word diapheromenon in verse Acts 27:27, but that was at the end of the drifting and the varied winds could have come then and not before. The whole narrative as explained carefully in Smith's Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul is a masterpiece of precise and accurate scholarship. A resume of his results appears in my Luke the Historian in the Light of Research.

Verse 18

As we laboured exceedingly with the storm (sphodrôs cheimazomenôn hêmôn). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of cheimazô, old verb to afflict with a tempest (cheima, stormy weather), to toss upon the waves, here alone in N.T. They began to throw overboard (ekbalên epoiounto). Literally, "They began to make (inchoative imperfect middle of poieô) a casting out" (ekbolên from ekballô, to cast out, old word, only here in N.T.). Cf. Latin jacturam facere. This to lighten the ship by throwing overboard the cargo. The grain in the ship would shift and make it list and so added to the danger. They cast out (eripsan). Third person plural aorist active of riptô, not eripsamen as Textus Receptus. With their own hands (autocheires). Old word (autos, cheir) but here alone in N.T. Vivid and graphic touch by Luke who, of course, watched every movement day by day. The tackling (tên skeuên). The furniture of the ship that could be spared. It was becoming desperate.

Verse 20

When neither sun nor stars shone upon us (mête héliou mête astrôn epiphainontôn). Genitive absolute again. For many days (epi pleionas hêmeras). For more days than a few. No small tempest (cheimonos ouk oligou). Litotes again. All hope that we should be saved was now taken away (loipon periêireito elpis pása tou sôzesthai hêmas). "For the rest (or future) there began to be taken from around us (periêireito inchoative imperfect and see use of the verb in 2Co 13:16 of the veil) all hope of the being saved so far as we were concerned." Despair was beginning to settle like a fog on all their hopes. Had Paul lost hope?

Verse 21

When they had been long without food (pollês te asitias huparchousês). Genitive absolute, the old word asitia from asitos (verse Acts 27:33) a privative and sitos, food, here alone in N.T. Literally, "There being much abstinence from food." They had plenty of grain on board, but no appetite to eat (sea-sickness) and no fires to cook it (Page). "Little heart being left for food" (Randall). Galen and other medical writers use asitia and asitos for want of appetite. Stood forth (statheis). As in Acts 1:15; Acts 2:14; Acts 17:22. Pictorial word (Page) that sets forth the vividness and solemnity of the scene (Knowling). Ye should have hearkened unto me (edei men peitharchêsantas moi). Literally, "It was necessary for you hearkening unto me not to set sail (mê anagesthai)." It was not the "I told you so" of a small nature, "but a reference to the wisdom of his former counsel in order to induce acceptance of his present advice" (Furneaux). The first aorist active participle is in the accusative of general reference with the present infinitive anagesthai. And have gotten this injury and loss (kerdêsai te tên hubrin tautên kai tên zêmian). This Ionic form kerdêsai (from kerdaô) rather than kerdênai or kerdânai is common in late Greek (Robertson, Grammar, p. 349). The Revised Version thus carries over the negative mê to this first aorist active infinitive kerdêsai from kerdaô (cf. on Mat 16:26). But Page follows Thayer in urging that this is not exact, that Paul means that by taking his advice they ought to have escaped this injury and loss. "A person is said in Greek 'to gain a loss' when, being in danger of incurring it, he by his conduct saves himself from doing so." This is probably Paul's idea here.

Verse 22

And now (kai ta nun). Accusative plural neuter article of general reference in contrast with men in verse Acts 27:21. Paul shows modesty (Bengel) in the mild contrast. No loss of life (apobolê psuchês oudemia). Old word from apoballô, to throw away, only twice in N.T. Rom 11:15 (rejection) and here. He had foretold such loss of life as likely (verse Acts 27:10), but he now gives his reason for his changed view.

Verse 23

For there stood by me (parestê gar moi). Second aorist active (intransitive) indicative of paristêmi with the locative case (beside me). The very form used by Paul of his trial (2Ti 4:17) when "the Lord stood by me" (ho de kurios moi parestê) when others deserted him. This angel of the God whom Paul serves (in distinction from the heathen gods) is the reason for Paul's present confidence.

Verse 24

Thou must stand before Caesar (Kaisari se dei parastênai). Note the same dei (must) as in Acts 23:11 when Jesus appeared to Paul in Jerusalem and the same verb parastênai (second aorist active infinitive) used in verse Acts 27:23. Hath granted thee (kecharistai soi). Perfect middle indicative of charizomai and that from charis, a gift or grace. The lives of those that sailed with Paul God had spared as a gift (charis) to Paul.

Verse 25

Wherefore be of good cheer (dio euthumeite). God had spoken. That was enough. This old verb from euthumos in the N.T. only here, verse Acts 27:25; Jas 5:13. See the adjective Acts 27:36. For I believe God (pisteuô gar tôi theôi). This is Paul's reason for his own good cheer and for his exhortation to confidence in spite of circumstances so untoward. Paul had doubtless prayed for his own life and for the lives of all. He was sure that he was to bear his witness in Rome.

Verse 26

We must be cast (dei hêmâs ekpesein). It is necessary for us to fall out (ekpesein, second aorist active infinitive of ekpiptô). It was not revealed to Paul what island it would be.

Verse 27

As we were driven to and fro (diapheromenôn hêmôn). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of diapherô, old verb to bear different ways (dia=duo, two), this way and that. Continued to be tossed to and fro in the rough seas. It would seem so to those on board. It does not necessarily mean that the wind had changed. The fourteenth night is reckoned from the time they left Fair Havens. In the sea of Adria (en tôi Hadriâi). Not the Adriatic Sea as we now call the sea between Italy and the mainland of Illyricum, but all the lower Mediterranean between Italy and Greece. Luke's usage is like that of Strabo. Surmised (hupenooun). Imperfect active indicative of huponoëô, inchoative, began to suspect. That they were drawing near to some country (prosagein tina autois chôran). Infinitive with accusative of general reference in indirect assertion. Prosagô is here used intransitively and Luke writes from the sailor's standpoint that a certain land was drawing near to them (autois, dative). The sailors heard the sound of breakers and grew uneasy.

Verse 28

They sounded (bolisantes). First aorist active participle of bolizô rare verb only here and in Eustathius who says it was familiar in ancient Greek. Apparently from bolis, a missile or dart, and so to throw down the lead into the sea, to heave the lead, to take soundings. The inscriptions give bolimos for "leaden." Twenty fathoms (orguias eikosi). This old word, from oregô, to stretch, means the distance from one outstretched middle finger tip to the other likewise out-stretched. After a little space (brachu diastêsantes). Literally, "standing apart a little" (second aorist active participle of diistêmi), that is, the ship going a short distance further on. A ship today approaching St. Paul's Bay by the rocky point of Koura would pass first twenty, then fifteen fathoms (Furieux).

Verse 29

Lest haply we should be cast ashore on rocky ground (mê pou kata tracheis topous ekpesômen). The usual construction after a verb of fearing (mê and the aorist subjunctive ekpesômen). Literally, "Lest somewhere (pou) we should fall out down against (kata) rocky places." The change in the soundings made it a very real fear. Tracheis (rough) is old adjective, but in the N.T. only here and Luke 3:5 (from Isa 40:4). Four anchors (agkuras tessaras). Old word from agkê. In N.T. only in this chapter, with rhiptô here, with ekteinô in verse Acts 27:30, with periaireô in verse Acts 27:40; and Heb 6:19 (figuratively of hope). From the stern (ek prumnês). Old word, but in N.T. only in Mark 4:38; here and Acts 27:41 in contrast with prôira (prow). The usual practice was and is to anchor by the bows. "With a view to running the ship ashore anchoring from the stern would, it is said, be best" (Page). Nelson is quoted as saying that he had been reading Acts 27:1ff. the morning of the Battle of Copenhagen (April, 1801) where he anchored his ships from the stern. Wished for the day (êuchonto). Imperfect middle, kept on praying for "day to come" (hêmeran genesthai) before the anchors broke under the strain of the storm or began to drag. If the ship had been anchored from the prow, it would have swung round and snapped the anchors or the stern would have faced the beach.

Verse 30

The sailors (tôn nautôn). Old word from naus (ship), in N.T. only here, verse Acts 27:30; Rev 18:17. Were seeking (zêtountôn). Genitive absolute again with present active participle of zêteô to seek. Had lowered (chaliasantôn). Aorist active participle of chalazô. Under colour (prophasei). Possibly the same word as "prophecy" (from pro-phêmi, to speak forth), but here pretence, pretext, although it may come from prophainô, to show forth. The use here is an old one and appears also in Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47; 1Th 2:5; Php 1:18. As though (hôs). The alleged reason, a common Greek idiom with hôs and the participle (Robertson, Grammar, p. 966). Here with mellontôn. From the foreship (ek prôirês). Old word for prow of the ship. In the N.T. only here and verse Acts 27:41. Note here ekteinein (lay out, stretch out) rather than rhapsantes (casting) in verse Acts 27:29, for they pretended to need the small boat to stretch out or lay out the anchors in front.

Verse 31

Except these abide in the ship (Ean mê houtoi meinôsin en tôi plioîi). Condition of the third class (undetermined, but with hope, etc.). Paul has no hesitancy in saying this in spite of his strong language in verse Acts 27:24 about God's promise. He has no notion of lying supinely down and leaving God to do it all. Without the sailors the ship could not be properly beached.

Verse 32

The ropes (ta schoinia). Diminutive of schoinos, old word, but in N.T. only here and John 2:15. Paul is now saviour of the ship and the soldiers quickly cut loose the skiff and "let her fall off" (eiasan autên ekpesein) rather than be the means of the escape of the sailors who were needed. This dastardly scheme of the sailors would have brought frightful loss of life.

Verse 33

While the day was coming on (achri hou hêmëra êmellen ginesthai). More likely here achri hou (for achri toutou hôi) with the imperfect êmellen, has its usual meaning, "until which time day was about to come on (ginesthai, present middle infinitive, linear action)." That is Paul kept on exhorting or beseeching (parekalei, imperfect active) them until dawn began to come on (cf. verse Acts 27:39 when day came). In Heb 3:13 achri hou with the present indicative has to mean "so long as" or while, but that is not true here (Robertson, Grammar, p. 975). See on Acts 2:46 for the same phrase for partaking food (metalambanô trophês, genitive case) as also in Acts 27:34. Paul wanted them to be ready for action when day really came. "Fourteenth day" repeated (verse Acts 27:27), only here in the accusative of duration of time (hēmeran). It is not clear whether the "waiting" (prosdokôntes, present active participle predicate nominative complementary participle after diateleite, Robertson, Grammar, p. 1121) means fourteen days of continuous fasting or only fourteen successive nights of eager watching without food. Galen and Dionysius of Halicarnassus employ the very idiom used here by Luke (asitos diateleô). Having taken nothing (mêthen proslabomenoi). Second aorist middle participle of proslambanô with the accusative mêthen rather than the more usual mêden. Probably Paul means that they had taken no regular meals, only bits of food now and then.

Verse 34

For this is for your safety (touto gar pros tês humeteras sôtêrias huparchei). Note sôtêria in sense of "safety," literal meaning, not spiritual salvation. This is the only instance in the N.T. of the use of pros with the ablative meaning "from the side of" your safety, though a classic idiom (Robertson, Grammar, p. 623), an example of Luke's literary style. Perish (apoleitai). Future middle (intransitive) of apollumi (-uô), to destroy. So the oldest MSS. rather than peseitai from piptô, to fall. This proverbial expression occurs also in Luke 21:18 which see and in 1Sa 14:45; 2Sa 14:11; 1Ki 1:52.

Verse 35

Gave thanks to God (eucharistêsen tôi theôi). First aorist active indicative of eucharisteô from which our word "Eucharist" comes. It was saying grace like the head of a Hebrew family and the example of Paul would encourage the others to eat. Probably Paul, Luke, and Aristarchus had memories of the Lord's supper (Acts 2:42) while to others it was only an ordinary meal (Luke 24:30).

Verse 36

Then were they all of good cheer (euthumoi de genomenoi). More exactly, "Then all becoming cheerful," because of Paul's words and conduct. Took food (proselabonto trophês). Partitive genitive here (some food), not accusative as verse Acts 27:33. Paul's courage was contagious.

Verse 37

Two hundred three-score and sixteen souls (diakosiai hebdomêkonta hex). The Vatican Manuscript (B) has hôs in place of diakosiai (two hundred) which Westcott and Hort put in the margin. But Alford is probably correct in suggesting that the scribe of B wrote hôs by repeating the omega in ploiôi with s = 200 (Greek numeral). If the number 276 seems large, it is to be remembered that we do not know the size of the ship. Josephus (Life, 3) says that there were 600 on the ship that took him to Italy. The grain ships were of considerable size. The number included sailors, soldiers, and prisoners. A muster or roll call may have been made.

Verse 38

When they had eaten enough (koresthentes trophês). First aorist passive of korennumi, old verb to satisfy, to satiate, with the genitive. Literally, "Having been satisfied with food." Here only in the N.T. They lightened (ekouphizon). Inchoative imperfect active, began to lighten. Old verb from kouphos and originally to be light, but transitive to lighten, as here, from Hippocrates on. Throwing out the wheat (ekballomenoi ton siton). The cargo of wheat. The second ekbolê (verse Acts 27:18) or casting out and overboard which was only partially done at first.

Verse 39

They knew not (ouk epeginôskon). Imperfect active of epiginôskô, to recognize. Probably conative, tried to recognize and could not (Conybeare and Howson). The island was well-known (Acts 28:1, epegnômen), but St. Paul's Bay where the wreck took place was some distance from the main harbour (Valetta) of Melita (Malta). They perceived (katanooun). Imperfect active of katanoëô, gradually perceived after some effort as in Acts 11:16. This beach seemed their only hope. They took counsel (ebouleuonto). Imperfect middle showing the process of deliberation and doubt. The bay "having a beach" (echonta aigialon) is a phrase found in Xenophon's Anabasis VI. 4, 4. Whether they could drive (ei dunainto eksôsai). This use of the optative with ei in questions of this sort (implied indirect) is a neat Greek idiom (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). B C Bohairic read eksôsai (first aorist active infinitive of eksôzô), to save out (so Westcott and Hort), instead of exôsai (from exôtheô, to push out, as Textus Receptus).

Verse 40

Casting off (perielontes). Second aorist active of periaireô. Literally, "Having taken away from around," that is all four anchors from around the stern. Cf. the other verbs with agkuras in verse Acts 27:29, 30. They left them in the sea (eiôn eis tên thalassan). Imperfect active of eaô, either descriptive or inchoative. They let the anchors go and the ropes fell down into the sea. At the same time loosing the bands of the rudders (hama anentes tas zeuktêrias tôn pèdaliôn). On the use of hama with the participle, old Greek idiom see Robertson, Grammar, p. 1139. The second aorist active participle of aniêmi, to relax, loosen up. Old verb, in N.T. Acts 16:26; Acts 27:40; Eph 6:9; Heb 13:5. Thayer notes that zeuktêrias (bands) occurs nowhere else, but several papyri use it of yokes and waterwheels (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary). The word for rudders (pèdalion) is an old one (from pèdon, the blade of an oar), but in the N.T. only here and Jas 3:4. Page notes that the ancient ships had a pair of paddle rudders like those of the early northmen, one on each quarter. The paddle rudders had been fastened while the ship was anchored. Hoisting up the foresail to the wind (eparantes ton artemôna têi pneousêi). Supply aurâi (breeze) after pneousêi (blowing). It is not clear what "sail" is meant by "artemôna." No other example in Greek is known, though the scholiast to Juvenal XII. 68 explains velo prora suo by artemone solo. Hence "foresail" is probably correct. They made for the beach (kateichon eis ton aigialon). Imperfect active of katechô, to hold down, perhaps inchoative. "They began to hold the ship steadily for the beach."

Verse 41

But lighting upon (peripesontes de). Second aorist active participle of peripiptô, old verb to fall into and so be encompassed by as in Luke 10:30; Jas 1:2. There is a current on one side of St. Paul's Bay between a little island (Salmonetta) and Malta which makes a sand bank between the two currents. Unexpectedly the ship stuck in this sandbar. Where two seas met (dithalasson). Used in Strabo and Dio Chrysostom for divided seas (dis, thalassa). They ran the vessel aground (epekeilan tēn naun). First aorist active indicative of old verb epikellō, to run a ship ashore. Only here in N.T. Here also we have the only N.T. use of naus for ship (from naō, neō, to swim) so common in ancient Greek. Our word navy is from this word through the Latin. Struck (ereisasa). First aorist active participle of ereidō, old verb to fix firmly. Only here in N.T. Unmoveable (asaleutos). From a privative and saleuō to shake. Old word. In N.T. only here and Heb 12:28. Began to break up (elueto). Inchoative imperfect passive of the old verb luō, to loosen. The prow was stuck in the sand-bar, and the stern was breaking to pieces by the opposing waves lashing on both sides. It was a critical moment.

Verse 42

Counsel was to kill (boulē egeneto hina--apokteinōsin). The soldiers did not relish the idea of the escape of the prisoners. Hence there came this "counsel" (boulē). Regular Greek idiom for purpose (hina and aorist active subjunctive of apokteinō, to kill). Soldiers were responsible for the lives of prisoners (Acts 12:19). Swim out (ekkolumbēsas). First aorist active participle of ekkolumbaō, old verb to swim out and so away. Escape (diaphugēi). Second aorist (effective) active subjunctive of diapheugō, to make a clean (dia) escape.

Verse 43

To save Paul (diasōsai ton Paulon). Effective first aorist active infinitive of diasōzō. And no wonder for the centurion knew now how much they all owed to Paul. Stayed them from their purpose (ekōleusen autous tou boulēmatos.) Ablative case of boulēma after ekōleusen (from kōleuō, to hinder, common verb). And get first to land (prōtous eis tēn gēn exienai). This classic verb exeimi occurs four times in Acts (Acts 13:42; Acts 17:15; Acts 20:7; Acts 27:32) and nowhere else in the N.T. It was a wise command.

Verse 44

Some on planks (hous men epi sanisin). Common Greek idiom (hous men--hous de) for "some--some." The only N.T. instance of the old Greek word sanis for board or plank. The breaking of the ship gave scraps of timber which some used. They all escaped safe (pantas diasôthênai). First aorist passive infinitive of diasôzô (the very word used for the desire of the centurion about Paul) with accusative of general reference, the clause being subject of egeneto. So Luke in this marvellous narrative, worthy of any historian in any age, shows how Paul's promise was fulfilled (verse Acts 27:24). Paul the prisoner is the hero of the voyage and shipwreck, a wonderful example of God's providential care.

Verse 1

Then we knew (tote epegnômen). Second aorist (ingressive) active indicative of epiginôskô. Then we recognized. See Acts 27:39. Was called (kaleitai). Present passive indicative retained in indirect discourse. Melita (Melitê). Not Miletênê as only B reads, a clerical error, but retained in the text of Westcott and Hort because of B. Page notes that the island was Malta as is shown from the name, the location, the presence of a ship from Alexandria bound for Rome wintering there (verse Acts 28:11), and the mention of Syracuse as the next stop after leaving (verse Acts 28:12).

Verse 2

The barbarians (hoi barbaroi). The Greeks called all men "barbarians" who did not speak Greek (Rom 1:14), not "barbarians" in our sense of rude and uncivilized, but simply "foreign folk." Diodorus Siculus (V. 12) says that it was a colony of the Phoenicians and so their language was Punic (Page). The word originally meant an uncouth repetition (barbar) not understood by others (1Co 14:11). In Col 3:11 Paul couples it with Scythian as certainly not Christian. These are (with verse Acts 28:4 below) the only N.T. instances. Showed us (pareichan). Imperfect active of parechô with -an instead of -on as eichan in Mark 8:7 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 339). It was their habit on this occasion, Luke means, they kept on showing. No common kindness (ou tèn tuchousan philanthrôpian). The old word philanthrôpia (philos, anthrôpos), love of mankind, occurs in the N.T. only here and Tit 3:4 (adverb in Acts 27:3). See on Acts 19:11 for this use of ou tèn tuchousan, "not the kindness that happens every day." They were not "wreckers" to take advantage of the calamity. They kindled a fire (hapsantes puran). The only N.T. example and verse Acts 28:3 of the old word pura (from pur, fire), a pile of burning fuel (sticks). First aorist active participle of haptô, to set fire to, to kindle. Cf. anaptô in Luke 12:49. Received us all (proselabonto pantas hêmâs). Second aorist middle (indirect indicative of proslambanô). They took us all to themselves (cf. Acts 18:26). The present (ton ephestôta). Second perfect active participle (intransitive) of ephistêmi, "the rain that stood upon them" (the pouring rain). Only in Luke and Paul in N.T.

Verse 3

When Paul had gathered (sustrepsantos tou Paulou). Genitive absolute with first aorist active participle of sustrephô, old verb to twist or turn together or roll into a bundle. In N.T. only here and Mat 17:22. A bundle of sticks (phruganôn ti plêthos). "Some multitude (or pile) of dry twigs" (phruganôn from phrugô or phrussô, to dry. Only here in N.T.). Laid (epithentos). So genitive absolute again with second aorist active participle of epitithêmi, to place upon. Few things show Paul to better advantage than this incident. By reason of the heat (apo tês thermês). Old word, only here in N.T. Ablative case with apo (from the heat). The viper was in a state of torpor in the bundle of sticks. The heat wakened him. A viper (echidna). The old word used by the Baptist of the Pharisees (Mat 3:7; Luke 3:7) and by Jesus also (Mat 12:34; Mat 23:33). It is objected that there is little wood in the island today and no vipers, though Lewin as late as 1853 believes that he saw a viper near St. Paul's Bay. But the island now has 1,200 people to the square mile and snakes of any kind have a poor chance. The viper has also disappeared from Arran as the island became more frequented (Knowling). Ramsay thinks that the small constrictor (Coronella Austriaca) which still exists in the island may be the "viper," though it has no poison fangs, but clings and bites. The natives thought that it was a poisonous viper. Fastened on his hand (kathêpse tês cheiros autou). First aorist active indicative of kathaptô, to fasten down on with the genitive case. Old verb, here only in N.T. Cf. Mark 16:18.

Verse 4

The beast (to thêrion). Diminutive of thêr and so little beast. See on Mark 1:13. Aristotle and the medical writers apply the word to venomous serpents, the viper in particular (Knowling), as Luke does here. Vincent calls attention to the curious history of our word "treacle" for molasses (Latin theriaca) from thêriakê, an antidote made from the flesh of vipers. Coverdale translates Jer 8:22: "There is no more treacle in Gilead." Jeremy Taylor: "We kill the viper and make treacle of him." Hanging from his hand (kremamenon ek tês cheiros autou). Vivid picture of the snake dangling from Paul's hand. Present middle participle of kremamai, late form for kremannumi, to hang up, to suspend (cf. Gal 3:13). No doubt (pantôs). Literally, By all means, old adverb. Cf. Acts 21:22; Luke 4:23; 1Co 9:22. Only by Luke and Paul in the N.T. "They knew that he was a prisoner being taken to Rome on some grave charge, and inferred that the charge was murder" (Page). Though he hath escaped (diasôthenta). First aorist passive participle of diasôzô (same verb used in 24:43,44; Acts 28:1), so-called concessive use of the participle (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1129). Yet Justice (dikê). An abstraction personified like the Latin Justitia (Page). The natives speak of Dikê as a goddess, but we know nothing of such actual worship in Malta, though the Greeks worshipped abstractions as in Athens. Hath not suffered (ouk eiasen). Did not suffer. They look on Paul as a doomed man as good as dead. These people thought that calamity was proof of guilt, poor philosophy and worse theology.

Verse 5

Shook off (apotinaxas). First aorist active participle of apotinassô, to shake off. Rare word (Euripides, Galen, LXX). In N.T. only here and Luke 9:5.

Verse 6

But they expected (hoi de prosedokôn). Imperfect active, were expecting, continued to expect. That he would have swollen (auton mellein pimprasthai). More exactly, "Expecting him to be about (or that he was about) to swell up." Pimprasthai is present middle infinitive from pimprêmi, to blow, to burn, to inflame, to cause to swell. Prêthô, to swell, seems connected and both use the aorist eprêsa. Our word "inflammation" likewise means a burning and a swelling. This verb is a common medical term used as Luke has it. It occurs here only in N.T. Or fallen down dead suddenly (ê katapiptein aphnô nekron). Rather, "or was about to fall down dead suddenly." The two common results of a bite by a viper or other poisonous snake, both medical terms used by Luke. But when they were long in expectation (epi polu de autôn prosdokôntôn). Genitive absolute. "But while they were expecting for much time." Nothing amiss come to him (mêden atopon eis auton ginomenon). "Nothing out of place coming to him" (present middle participle). Mêden the usual negative of the participle and the accusative case the object of theôrountôn (genitive absolute). Changed their minds (metabalomenoi). Aorist middle (direct) participle of metaballô, old verb to turn about or around, turning themselves about, changing their minds. Plato uses this very verb in middle voice for changing the mind. That he was a god (auton einai theon). Accusative and infinitive in indirect discourse. At Lystra Paul was first received as a god (Mercury) and then they stoned him to kill him (Acts 14:11, 19). So fickle is popular favour.

Verse 7

To the chief man of the island (tôi prôtôi tês nêsou). An official title correct in Malta (Ramsay, St. Paul, p. 343). An inscription in Malta calls Prudens "Primate of the Maltese" (prôtos Melitaiôn). Here it is plainly a title and not the common use seen in Acts 13:50; Acts 25:2; Acts 28:17. Publius (Popliôi). This Greek name (praenomen) can be derived either from Popilius or Publius (cf. publicus for populicus from populus). Entertained us (exenisen hêmâs). Paul and his companions (Luke and Aristarchus). Was Julius included? On xenizô see Acts 10:23. Courteously (philophronôs). This old adverb from philophrôn (philos, phren, friendly mind) occurs here alone in the N.T. In a kindly or friendly manner, all the more so because of the original suspicion of Paul as a criminal.

Verse 8

Lay (katakeisthai). Common verb for the sick (Mark 1:30; John 5:6). Sick (sunechomenon). "Held together." Common verb again for the sick as in Luke 4:38. Of fever (puretois). Instrumental case, and plural "fevers," medical term for intermittent attacks of fever (Demosthenes, Lucian, medical writers). Dysentery (dusenteriôî). Instrumental case also. Late form of the older dusenteria and only here in N.T. Our very word dysentery. Another medical term of which Luke uses so many. Hippocrates often mentions these two diseases together. Laying his hands on him healed him (epitheistai cheiras autôi iasato auton). Either like the laying on of hands in Jas 5:14, the gift of healing (1Co 12:9), or the tender interest of Jesus when he took hold of the hand of Peter's mother-in-law (Mark 1:31). Ramsay argues that iaomai is employed here of the miraculous healing by Paul while therapeuô is used of the cures by Luke the physician (verse Acts 28:9). This is a general distinction and it is probably observed here, but in Luke 6:18 (which see) both verbs are employed of the healings by Jesus. Came and were healed (prosêrchonto kai etherapeuonto). Imperfect middle and imperfect passive. A regular stream of patients came during these months. Luke had his share in the honours, "us" (hêmâs), and no doubt his share in the cures. With many honours (pollais timais). Instrumental case. The word was often applied to payment for professional services as we today speak of an honorarium. They put on board (epethento). Second aorist middle indicative of epitithêmi, to put on. The idea of "on board" is merely suggested by anagomenois (when we sailed) "the things for our needs" (ta pros tas chreias).

Verse 11

Which had wintered (parakeheimakoti). Perfect active participle of paracheimazô, to pass the winter. Old verb, in N.T. only Acts 27:12; Acts 28:11; 1Co 16:6; Tit 3:12. The locative case agreeing with ploiôi. Navigation in the Mediterranean usually opened up in February (always by March), spring beginning on Feb. 9 (Page). Whose sign was the Twin Brothers (parasêmôi Dioskourois). The word parasêmôi can be either a substantive (as Revised Version has it) or an adjective "marked by the sign," examples of both uses common in ancient Greek. Dioskourois is in apposition with parasêmôi. The word means the twin sons (kouros or koros) of Zeus (Dios, genitive of Zeus) and Leda, viz., Castor and Pollux. The Attic used the dual, tô Dioskorô. Castor and Pollux were the tutelary deities of sailors whose figures were painted one on each side of the prow of the ship. This sign was the name of the ship. So they start in another grain ship of Alexandria bound for Rome.

Verse 12

Touching (katachthentes). First aorist passive participle of katagô, to go down to land, just the opposite of anêchthêmen in verse Acts 28:11 from anagô, to go up to sea. At Syracuse (eis Surakousas). The chief city of Sicily and eighty miles from Malta. Perhaps open weather and a southerly wind helped them across. Here it was that Alcibiades wrecked the power and glory of Athens. Why the ship spent three days we do not know.

Verse 13

We made a circuit (perielthontes). Second aorist active of perierchomai, to go around, old verb, already in Acts 19:13. See also Heb 11:37; 1Ti 5:13. But Westcott and Hort read perielontes after Aleph B (from periaireô) as in Acts 27:40, though here it could only mean casting loose, for which no other authority exists. At any rate the ship had to tack to reach Rhegium and was not able to make a straight course (enthudromeô, Acts 16:11). Rhegium (Rhêgion) is from rhêgnumi, to break off, the place where the land breaks off, the southern entrance to the straits of Messina. A south wind sprang up (epigenomenou notou). Genitive absolute again, and for all the world like that fatal south wind in Acts 27:13, but with no bad results this time, though the weather was plainly treacherous at this early season. On the second day (deuteraioi). This is the classical use of the predicate adjective, "We second day men" as in Luke 24:22; John 11:39; Php 3:5 instead of the adverb (Robertson, Grammar, p. 657). To Puteoli (eis Potiolous). It was 182 miles from Rhegium and would require 26 hours (Page). It was eight miles northwest from Neapolis (Naples) and the chief port of Rome, the regular harbour for the Alexandrian ships from Rome. Portions of the great mole are said to be still visible.

Verse 14

Where we found brethren (hou heurontes adelphous). Possibly from Alexandria, but, as Blass observes, it is no more strange to find "brethren" in Christ in Puteoli when Paul arrives than in Rome. There was a large Jewish quarter. Seven days (hēmeras hepta). Accusative of extent of time. Paul and his party remained so long at the urgent request of the brethren. He was still a prisoner, but clearly Julius was only too glad to show another courtesy to Paul to whom they all owed their lives. It was 130 miles by land from Puteoli to Rome over one of the great Roman roads. And so we came to Rome (kai houtōs eis tēn Romēn êlthamen). So at last. Luke is exultant as Page observes: Paulus Romae captivus: triumphus unicus. It is the climax of the book of Acts (Acts 19:21; Acts 23:11), but not the close of Paul's career. Page rightly remarks that a new paragraph should begin with verse Acts 28:15, for brethren came from Rome and this part of the journey is touched with the flavour of that incident. The great event is that Paul reached Rome, but not as he had once hoped (Rom 15:22-29).

Verse 15

When they heard of us (akousantes ta peri hēmōn). How "they heard the things concerning us" we do not know. Good news had its way of travel even before the days of telegraph, telephone, daily papers. Possibly Julius had to send on special couriers with news of his arrival after the shipwreck. Possibly some of the brethren in Puteoli at once (beginning of the week) sent on news to the brethren in Rome. The church in Rome had long ago received Paul's letter from Corinth at the hands of Phoebe. To meet us (eis apantēsin hēmin). Idiomatic phrase, "for meeting with us" (associative instrumental case). Koin, word apantēsis from verb apantaō, to meet, in N.T. only here; Mat 25:6; 1Ti 4:17. Use after eis rather than infinitive like a translation Hebraism (Robertson, Grammar, p. 91). As far as the Market of Appius (achri Appiou Phorou). The Forum of Appius, 90 miles from Puteoli, 40 from Rome, on the great Appian Way. The Censor Appius Claudius had constructed this part of the road, B.C. 312. Paul probably struck the Appian Way at Capua. Portions of this great stone highway are still in use. If one wishes to tread where Paul trod, he can do it here. Appii Forum had a bad reputation, the haunt of thieves, thugs, and swindlers. What would this motley crowd think of Paul chained to a soldier? Three Taverns (Triôn Tabernôn). Genitive case after achri like Appiou Phorou. About 30 miles from Rome. Tres Tabernae. Whom (hous). Two groups of the disciples came (one Gentile, one Jewish, Rackham thinks), one to Appii Forum, the other to Three Taverns. It was a joyous time and Julius would not interfere. Took courage (elabe tharsos). The old substantive tharsos is here alone in the N.T. Jesus himself had exhorted Paul to be of good courage (tharsei Acts 23:11) as he had done the disciples (John 16:33). Paul had passed through enough to cause depression, whether he was depressed or not, but he deeply appreciated this kindly sympathy.

Verse 16

Paul was suffered to abide by himself (epetrapê tôi Paulôi menein kath' heauton). Second aorist passive of epitrepo, to permit or allow. Literally, "It was permitted to Paul to abide by himself." Some late documents (Textus Receptus) here add: "The centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard" (or the stratopedarch). This officer used to be considered Burrus who was Prefect of the Praetorian Guard A.D. 51-62. But it is by no means certain that Julius turned the prisoners over to this officer. It seems more likely that Julius would report to the captain of the Peregrini. If so, we may be sure that Julius would give a good report of Paul to this officer who would be kindly disposed and would allow Paul comparative freedom (living by himself, in his lodging, verse Acts 28:23, his own hired house verse Acts 28:30, though still chained to a soldier). With the soldier that guarded him (sun tôi phulassonti auton stratiôtêi). Probably a new soldier every day or night, but always with this soldier chained to his right hand day and night. Now that Paul is in Rome what can he do for Christ while he awaits the outcome of his own appeal to Nero?

Verse 17

Those that were the chief of the Jews (tous ontas tôn Ioudaiôn prôtous). This use of prôtos for the leading men of a city or among the Jews we have already had in Acts 13:50; Acts 25:2; Luke 19:47.

Literally, "Those that were first among the Jews." The position of the participle ontas between the article and the adjective prôtous is regular (Robertson, Grammar, p. 777). When they were come together (sunelthontôn autôn). Genitive absolute again. Paul could not go to the synagogue, as his custom was, being a bound prisoner. So he invited the Jewish leaders to come to his lodging and hear his explanation of his presence in Rome as a prisoner with an appeal to Caesar. He is anxious that they may understand that this appeal was forced upon him by Festus following Felix and lot because he has come to make an attack on the Jewish people. He was sure that false reports had come to Rome. These non-Christian Jews accepted Paul's invitation. Nothing against (ouden enantion). Adjective here as in Acts 26:9, not preposition as in Acts 7:10; Acts 8:32. From en and antios (anti), face to face. Concessive participle poiêsas as in verse Acts 28:4 (diasôthenta) which see. Yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans (desmios ex Ierosolumôn paredothên eis tas cheiras tôn Romaiôn). This condensed statement does not explain how he "was delivered," for in fact the Jews were trying to kill him when Lysias rescued him from the mob (Acts 22:27-30). The Jews were responsible for his being in the hands of the Romans, though they had hoped to kill him first.

Verse 18

When they had examined me (anakrinantes me). First aorist active participle of anakrinô, the same verb used already in Acts 24:8; Acts 25:6, 26 of the judicial examinations by Felix and Festus. Desired (eboulonto). Imperfect middle of attempted action or picture of their real attitude. This is a correct statement as the words of both Felix and Festus show. Because there was (dia to--huparchein). Accusative case with dia (causal use) with the articular infinitive, "Because of the being no cause of death in me" (en emoi, in my case, aitia, usual word for crime or charge of crime).

Verse 19

When the Jews spake against it (antilegontôn tôn Ioudaiôn). Genitive absolute again, antilegontôn (antilegô) common verb for speaking against as in Acts 13:45. Clementer dicit (Bengel). "The word is a mild one to describe the bitter enmity of the Jews"

(Knowing). I was constrained (ênagkathên). "I was compelled," first aorist passive indicative of anagkazô, the very word used of Paul's efforts to get the Christians to blaspheme (Acts 26:11) which see. Paul was compelled to appeal to Caesar (see Acts 25:11, 12 for this phrase), unless Paul was willing to be the victim of Jewish hate when he had done no wrong. Not that I had ought to accuse my nation of (ouch hôs tou ethnous mou echôn ti katêgorein). This use of hôs with a participle (echôn) is common in Greek for the alleged reason. The genitive case with the infinitive katêgorein is regular. Paul says ethnos instead of laos as in Acts 24:17; Acts 26:4.

Verse 20

Did I intreat (parekalesa). Did I invite you. Because of the hope of Israel (heineken tês elpidos tou Israel). Genitive with preposition heineken. The hope of the Messiah is his point as in Acts 26:6. I am bound with this chain (tên halusin tautên perikeimai). This old verb means to lie around as in Luke 17:2; Heb 12:1. But it is also used as the passive of peritithêmi, to place around with the accusative of peritithêmi retained. It is a transitive passive. Paul does not lie around the chain, but the chain lies around him, a curious reversal of the imagery (Robertson, Grammar, p. 815).

Verse 21

Letters (grammata). Official documents from the Sanhedrin about the charges against Paul. Any harm of thee (ti peri sou ponêron). Evil (ponêron). The three aorists (edexametha, apêggeilen, elalêsen) cover the past. These Jews do not mean to say that they had never heard of Paul. It is hardly likely that they had heard of his appeal to Caesar, "for how could the news have reached Rome before Paul?" (Page).

Verse 22

But we desire (axioumen de). Old verb axioô, to deem worthy, to think right or proper as in Acts 15:38 which see. They think it only fair to hear Paul's side of his case. Concerning this sect (peri tês haireseôs tautês). Paul had identified Christianity with Judaism (verse Acts 28:20) in its Messianic hope. The language seems to imply that the number of Christians in Rome was comparatively small and mainly Gentile. If the edict of Claudius for the expulsion of the Jews from Rome (Acts 18:2) was due to disturbance over Christ (Chrêstus), then even in Rome the Jews had special reason for hostility towards Christians. Everywhere spoken against (pantachou antilegetai). Cf. verse Acts 28:19. The line of cleavage between Jew and Christian was now sharply drawn everywhere.

Verse 23

Appointed (taxamenoî). First aorist middle participle of tassô. Formal arrangement as in Mat 28:16 when Jesus appointed the mountain for his meeting in Galilee. In great number (pleiones). Comparative of polus, "more than a few." Expounded (exetitheto). Imperfect middle of ektithêmi, to set forth, as in Acts 11:4; Acts 18:26. He did it with detail and care and spent all day at it, "from morning till evening" (apo prôî heôs hesperas). In N.T. only here, Acts 4:3 and Luke 24:29, though common word. Persuading them concerning Jesus (peithôn autous peri tou Iêsou). Conative present active participle, trying to persuade. It was only about Jesus that he could make good his claim concerning the hope of Israel (verse Acts 28:20). It was Paul's great opportunity. So he appealed both to Moses and to the prophets for proof as it was his custom to do.

Verse 24

Some believed (hoi men epeithonto). Imperfect passive indicative of peithô. More exactly, "some began to be persuaded" (inchoative). Some disbelieved (hoi de êpistoun). Imperfect active of apisteô, to disbelieve, continued to disbelieve. It is usually so.

Verse 25

When they agreed not (asumphônoi ontes). Old adjective, only here in N.T., double compound (a privative, sum, phônê), without symphony, out of harmony, dissonant, discordant. It was a triumph to gain adherents at all in such an audience. They departed (apeluonto). Imperfect middle (direct) indicative, "They loosed themselves from Paul." Graphic close. After that Paul had spoken one word (eipontos tou Paulou rhêma hen). Genitive absolute. One last word (like a preacher) after the all day exposition. Well (kalôs). Cf. Mat 14:7; Mark 7:6, 9 (irony). Here strong indignation in the very position of the word (Page). To your fathers (pros tous pateras humôn). So Aleph A B instead of hêmôn (our) like Stephen in Acts 7:52 whose words Paul had heard. By mentioning the Holy Spirit Paul shows (Knowling) that they are resisting God (Acts 7:52).

Verse 26

Say (eipon). Second aorist active imperative instead of the old form eipe. The quotation is from Isa 6:9, 10. This very passage is quoted by Jesus (Mat 13:14, 15; Mark 4:12; Luke 8:10) in explanation of his use of parables and in John 12:40 the very point made by Paul here, "the disbelief of the Jews in Jesus" (Page). See on Matthew for discussion of the language used. Here the first time ("go to this people and say") does not occur in Matthew. It is a solemn dirge of the doom of the Jews for their rejection of the Messiah foreseen so long ago by Isaiah.

Verse 28

This salvation (touto to sôtêrion). Adjective from sôtêr (Saviour), saving, bringing salvation. Common in the old Greek. The neuter as here often in LXX (as Ps 67:2) as substantive like sôtêria (cf. Luke 3:6). They will also hear (autoi kai akousontai). Autoi as opposed to the rejection by the Jews, "vivid and antithetical" (Page).

Verse 30

Two whole years (dietian holên). Only here in N.T. and Acts 24:27 which see. During these busy years in Rome Paul wrote Philippians, Philemon, Colossians, Ephesians, Epistles that would immortalize any man, unless, forsooth, one or more of them was written from Ephesus or Caesarea, which has not yet been proven. In his own hired dwelling (en idiôi misthômati). Old word, here only in N.T., that which is hired for a price (from misthoô and that from misthos, hire). Received (apedecheto). Imperfect middle of apodechomai, received from time to time as they came, all that came (eisporeuomenous) from time to time. Preaching (kerussôn), teaching (didaskôn), the two things that concerned Paul most, doing both as if his right hand was not in chains, to the amazement of those in Rome and in Philippi (Php 1:12-14). None forbidding him (akôlutôs). Old adverb from a privative and the verbal adjective kôlutos (from kôluô, to hinder), here only in the N.T. Page comments on "the rhythmic cadence of the concluding words." Page rejects the notion that the book is an unfinished work. It closes with the style of a concluded work. I agree with Harnack that Luke wrote the Acts during this period of two years in Rome and carried events no further because they had gone no further. Paul was still a prisoner in Rome when Luke completed the book. But he had carried Paul to "Rome, the capital of the world, Urbi et Orbi" (Page). The gospel of Christ has reached Rome. For the fate of Paul we must turn elsewhere. But Luke had the presence of Paul while he carried the Acts to its triumphant conclusion. Ramsay can give a good deal in proof of his claim that Luke is the greatest of all historians. Beyond a doubt his rank is high and the world can never repay its debt to this cultured physician who wrote the Gospel and the Acts.
